The [illegible] this excellent medicine enjoys, is derived from its cures, many of which are truly astonishing. Inveterate cases of [illegible] disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and saved by it. Scrofulous affections had [illegible] a hitch were aggravated by the scrofulous contamination until they were painfully [illegible], have been radically cured in such great numbers as almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues at home.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this unseen and subtle tenant of the organism makes itself manifest, and at last declares its presence by [illegible] or debilitating [illegible] when [illegible] seems [illegible] patience. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develops into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, miserable may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence on the skin, or foul ulcers [illegible] the [illegible] of the body. Hence the [illegible] of this [illegible] is [illegible] vitality, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and in [illegible] by the use of this [illegible] [illegible] Scrofula, Erysipelas, Rose or St. Anthony's Fire, Tetter or Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other complaints of visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Tic, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Uterine affections of the nervous and nervous system.

Scrofula or King's-evil and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though in such cases time is required for expelling the poisonous [illegible] by any medicine. During the continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Ayer's Sarsaparilla, [illegible] Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other complaints of visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Select Poetry.

England and America.

One people is our early pulse,
One is our stormy youth:
Drinking one stream of human thought,
One spring of heavenly truth:

One language at our mother's knee,
One in our Saviour's prayer—
One glorious heritage to own;
One future for us there.

The heroes of our days of old
Are yours, not ours alone;
Your Christian heroes of to-day,
We love them as our own.

There are too many homeless lands
For in the wild free West,
To be subdued for God and man,
Replenished and possessed;

There are too many fallen men,
For in the anxious East,
To be won back to truth and God,
From cramping beliefs released;—

There is too much good work to do,
And wrong to be undone;
Too many strongholds from the foe
That must be forced and won—

That we whom God hath set to be
The vanguard of the fight,
To bear the standard of his truth,
And to defend the right,

Should leave the mission of our race,
So high and wide and grant,
On worldly points of policy
To wrangle and debate.

Nay, side by side, in east and west,
In wild or heathen lands,
One prayer upon our hearts and lips,
One Bible in our hands,

One in our earliest home on earth,
One in our heavenly home,
We'll fight the battles of our Lord
Until his kingdom come.

Miss Warning's Victory.

Miss Warning had entered upon her duties as teacher of the village school.

"You'll be apt to have some trouble with Hal Thorn, the deacon's boy," widow Moss, her hostess, had said to her that morning over the breakfast coffee.

"He is a bad boy, then?"

"Yes, cares for nothing and nobody. His father can't keep him in school half the time. A smart lad, too, and quick with his book when he chooses. How well I remember the Sunday his mother first led him into meeting. He was scarcely more than a baby, and so bright and pretty—the people turned in their seats to get a second look at his laughing face. Little she thought poor woman, how he would be growing up."

"Mrs. Thorn is not living, I think I heard?" said Miss Waring.

"O no! she died—let me think—it will be ten years come Christmas. Hal must be fourteen—how the years fly."

"Would it have been the same Hal, if his mother had lived, do you think?"

"Perhaps not. She was a quite woman, was Mrs. Thorn, but it always seemed to me as if her 'Don't,' went further with the children than a thrashing from their father. The deacon holds a stiff rein. Why, Hal got into a tussle with butcher Barton's Pete one day, and between them, somehow, a stone crashed through Reuben Brown's plate glass window. Hal declared he didn't throw the stone, but Pete's two little brothers swore they saw him. The deacon said that if Hal would fight he wouldn't help him out of trouble, and he let him go to jail.

"Hal is quick as gunpowder, and he isn't afraid of anybody when his temper is up. He was beech nutting out in the wood-lot the day Squire Marlow's cattle broke into his twenty acre wheat field. They did about one hundred dollars damage. I'd been over to the deacon's on an errand, and was just coming down the front walk, when the squire came tearing over, accusing Hal of letting down the fence. I wish you could have seen that boy, Miss Waring. He stood up pale as death, and his eyes like two fires.

"'I didn't let down your fence, Squire Marlow,' says he, right before his father and Steve, 'but I wouldn't have cared if I had, and the best wish I can make you is that your cattle have eaten up five times the worth of Widow Larry's cow that you took for rent last winter, and little Patsy dying.'

"'If you believe it Miss Waring, the squire turned as red a cock's comb, and rode off without another word. I believe the deacon was not over sorry himself, but he thrashed Hal all the same, to take the impertinence out of him he said."

So it happened that Miss Waring looked with something more than usual interest along the line of larger boys who took their places on the back row of benches at the opening of the school. One by one their names were enrolled—He was not there. But a half hour later the door opened with a creak of decision, and a tall boy walked with a swinging, defiant step along the narrow aisle, casting a keen glance at the teacher as he went. She nodded pleasantly, her rapid, practised eye taking him in, from the heavy boots so splashed with mud as to suggest the cause of his tardiness to have been a morning visit to the creek, to the brown shapely throat revealed by the turn down collar of his coarse grey jacket, the proud head covered with crisp auburn curls, and the dark eyes full of fire.

No wonder, she thought, that the people had turned in their seats when the dove-eyed mother brought in her young eaglet. She could fancy him in his glorious babyhood, radiant, unsullied—heaven his fatherland, earth his inheritance.

The teacher paused until the room was quiet again, then she resumed what she had been saying.

"As I was telling you, children, rules are troublesome, and only good for people who do not wish to keep them. It is so much nicer to do the things we ought because we like to. Now we are here, first and always to learn. I shall give you just one rule, 'Do right!' The very smallest one of you will understand that. And I shall trust you, every one.

Days passed on, Miss Waring's single rule was working. The children were not perfect—regrettably human sometimes—yet the best in each nature seemed striving itself, like a plant to the sunshine, abundant by oberlie soil, turned aside by stones, half choked by rank weeds, yet struggling and aspiring still. So she worked and waited.

Hal Thorn developed powers of attention and application which astonished her. His old-school had been thus far irreproachable, but he seemed to shield himself behind an impenetrable barrier. She felt herself set tried, with judgment reserved.

At last, it was one noon, a sound of angry voices smote her ear. She stepped to the door. The boys were gathered in a crowd, and the first glance showed her Hal Thorn, his eyes blazing and his face pale with passion.

"Take that back, Bill Jenkins!" His fist was raised high, the words on his hold clenched teeth. The boys parted suddenly; Jack did not see.

A hand touched his shoulder.

He turned fiercely, wavered for an instant, then a steady defiant gleam flashed to meet the teacher's sad firm eyes. There is no use! The chance is lost, it seemed to say.

"Harold, he is smaller than you."

That was all she said, no sharpness of personal reproof not one word about the wickedness of fighting, the guilt of anger and profanity.

A swift flush dyed his cheek—his hand dropped to his side, for a moment, all was still in the playground. Miss Waring held out her hand. The boy caught it impulsively, then as suddenly letting it fall, he turned, vaulted over the high fence, and running swiftly across the meadow, toward the creek, disappeared behind a clump of willows.

No human eye saw him there lying upon the grass, his face in his hands, his young breast swept with stormy sobs. If he prayed he did not know it. I doubt if he thought of God at all. But perhaps He who saw the boy's soul groping blindly after some good it did not know, feeling weakly for some strength not his own, yearning for its bitter unrest toward some uncomprehended peace was less jealous of forms and names than some of us His followers.

Hal came back at a little past the hour for afternoon session, silent and pale, but Miss Waring knew instinctively that it was no sullenness which prevented a response to her smile of welcome. It was well, she thought, that his heart was too sore for rapid healing. Meanwhile she must give him as best she could, the safe tonic of helpful service.

She asked him to stay after school and help her to carve a pair of brackets with which she meant to surprise the children, each one to hold a simple vase, since the daily floral offerings were sadly crowded by the globe and books on her little desk.

"I am so awkward with a jackknife, Hal," she said, laughingly, "and last night I cut my finger, and was quite discouraged. Then who should come in but Grandpa Spinney, with that wonderful cane-head of his, and when I asked him who cut it, he told me quite proudly it was you. So I knew immediately where to go for help."

The boy blushed, half ashamed of having been detected in a little kindness—common opinion having given him over to the unhallowed evil he unquestionably shared with the rest of humanity, the tendency to preserve a consistent reputation. However, he consented eagerly to her request.

She praised his skill with the knife, and he told her of old Anton, the Swiss wood carver who had once sojourned in the village, with his quaint costume and broken speech, and his thrilling stories of a life among the mountains and glaciers.

"O, Miss Waring," he cried out at last, quite carried away by enthusiasm, "I should like to go there, somewhere, anywhere to be free."

Miss Waring laid her gentle hand on his head.

"My boy," said she, "even here, at home, you may be more than free—a king."

His eager eyes were on her face. Her solemn, yet very tender voice, went on:—

"He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city. A much harder conquest, Harold—a prouder victory."

The boy breathed heavily, and his eyes sank, dim with a film of unshed tears. They watched on a while in silence, then the teacher took out her watch—

"It is tea time," she said. "I am going your way to-night. Shall we walk together?"

Deacon Thorn, from his work in the garden, bowed to Miss Waring as they drew near.

"I must beg your pardon, Mr. Thorn," she said, "for having kept Harold out so late. I wanted his help about a little bit of work I was doing."

"I'm very glad, miss, if you can make him of any use. It's more than anybody else can."

"Harold is doing very finely at his arithmetic, Mr. Thorn. I am quite proud of him."

"Well, the term's but just begun. A new broom, you know, Miss."

She saw the old, hard look darken over the boy's face.

"God give me patience with this man's blindness," her soul cried out, as she turned to pass on the way.

She would have bidden Harold good-night, but he still walked at her side, his brows knit and lowering.

"You see how it is," he burst out at last. "There's no use."

"Harold," she answered, "make your father trust you. This is part of the battle. You're not a coward to fly at the first onslaught?"

"A coward, ma'. His face flamed. But it seems to be, cowardly to have things. I'm sick of snubbing and patience, and all that. There's that Cooley—you know him, Miss Waring. He came to pay me when I was in——

He stopped short with a hot flush, and his listener felt instinctively that the hated word "jail" had almost passed his lips.

"He came to pay me cents, and told me how, secretly, without I was, and talked about—about—" Again he paused ashamed—"and then he gave him dog his cents in the furrow." Miss Waring, till the style by all is likely

"Harold, what makes the sharp? Isn't your conscience troubling you a little? Wouldn't they make pewter ones, do you think? If there were no truth, would there be any lies?"

"You know, the chapter you read this morning? Why didn't he ask for the twelve legions of angels? There's Jesus and that old Satan in him."

"They didn't take it, Harold! It was His will to bear and suffer was His. He was free at the judgment seat—on the cross—in the grave. It was the victory of love. Neither love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Kindness were not even that."

Wistfully the captive strove with the boy's frame, and left him still. At last, "His life for his friends," he repeated softly. Then lifting his head, "I'll do it some time."

She looked into his face and knew that she had won his heart. Do you wonder that she trembled?

The boy stood still where she had left him, looking towards her with the red light, Midas-like, touching his hair of vivid gold. Through all the years of her life she would carry his image as he was that night.

The entered a cottage whither her experience had led to offer her services as night-watcher, with one of her little scholars who lay sick. A neighbour having been already engaged, Miss Waring begged to stay, at least until she could come. It was late in the evening when she walked home, and Mrs. Moss, not expecting her, had retired an hour before. She let herself in with a duplicate key which she carried, and went noiselessly up stairs, where she lay for a long time sleepless, but at about midnight she sank into a [illegible] redly on him through the darkness like demon's eyes. Breathlessly he hastened forward, and a great shout tore the still air.

Fire! Fire!

Mrs. Moss leaped from her bed in terror at the thunderous beating at her door, to see one half of the wall of her room, a third, smouldering mass, which even as she rushed past it towards the outer door, burst into a live flame behind her.

The street was already full of half-dressed people.

"Miss Waring," cried half a score of voices. "Where is she?"

"Not here, she did not come home last night," came from the widow's pale lips.

"Thank God for that."

All, through it all, the tumult, the shouting, the hurrying, the rush of the destroying fire, she lay in that strange unbroken trance of sleep. No one could reach her now, the whole lower story of the old house was one shell of fire which burst through burning melting panes and [illegible] clapboarding. Men, women, and children ran aimlessly to and fro, as if fascinated, with their useless pails and buckets in their hands.

Suddenly, a cry! Shrill, sharp, freezing the very heart's blood of those who heard.

She stood in the little gable window, the black masses of her hair sweeping down her white robe, her hands outstretched in an agony of fear and entreaty. A deep groan of despair went up from the crowd below, seeming to her quickened senses to fall back from the leaden sky with a dull, hopeless rebound. She understood it all now. One thrill of dreadful anguish of the strained chords that bind every human heart to life, and Margaret Waring was quite calm.

Some of the old Huguenot blood burned in the veins of this girl, her slender limbs were imbued of the pure stuff out of which martyrs were made. An old hymn of her childhood sprang to her lips, wild and sweet the quaint meddy rang out upon the air—

"The Lord is coming, is coming,
In a chariot of fire!
Fly up, my soul, to meet him
On the wings of thy desire!"

There is a sudden movement in the crowd, a gathering of all eyes. What do they see?

A bodish figure, appearing no one knows how or whence, climbing toilsomely up the steep roof slope, clinging with bare feet and hands to the smoking shingles, sliding, slipping, yet advancing till he has reached the top, he runs along the dizzy ridge, he throws himself at full length along th angle above the gable window, he is fastening something to the cornice spire.

Something falling between her and the sky strikes Margaret's hand. It is the end of a rope, rudely knotted, and above the face of Harold Thorn. All the sternness of life swoons back upon her with a dizzying wish.

"Come."

She steps upon the window-sill, and grasps the rope. She does not once look down—the boy holds her—with his magnetic eyes. She feels the strength of giants tingle along her tender wrists. Her old, childish play with her brother, at sea-faring, with mimic rigging fastened to the great beams of the barn, will serve her now in climbing for her life.

Up, up, the rope strains, but holds. Up, up, she feels his hands. Half clambering, half drawn, she lies panting on the roof. The crowd cheers, but only faintly, for the flames are bursting through the roof now, and the danger is only begun.

Holding fast to each other, they work their way down. Great clouds of smoke burst up, and snatch their breath. They stand upon the shelving eaves, they leap together upon the lower roof of the wing—bruised, choking, but unfaltering. Courage, yonder a hundred waiting arms.

Now, miss Harold, jump.

Margaret springing through the suffocating smoke, she finds herself caught up and borne—she struggles for a sight of Hal. There is a crash, a rumbling like an earthquake, [illegible] the night sky.

Hal, Hal, she shrieks, but there is no answer.

[illegible] the boy's face.

"Lay me down, father," he gasped. "Where is she?"

She dropped [illegible] him—she would have given her own life-blood from her own heart to feed his life one hour—and took his head upon her breast.

"O my son, my son," groaned the stern, toiling man. "Drink at [illegible] my child."

The boy turned his eyes towards him, smiling feebly, but in a moment his uncertain gaze wandered back to Margaret's face.

"Greater love—" he whispered, "say it."

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend." She answered.

A glow, not of the fire-light, shone upon his face, then faded slowly, slowly—and she closed his eyes.

A West Virginia Doctor.

The major presented me to Doctor Didiwick, a red-headed, stuttering, eccentric individual, who was going up toward Yeokem's on a professional tour, and would ride with us. This was fortunate, as the road we contemplated traveling was very obscure and difficult, and the country not an agreeable one to get lost in.

The doctor also counseled us to provide against all contingencies on to-morrow's journey; so we ordered our hostess to have prepared a ham, a sack of biscuit, and some bottles of cold tea—this last, by-the-way, a most excellent beverage for wayfaring people.

After supper, hearing a mighty and continuous thumping in the direction of the kitchen, I thought it advisable to look in and give some special direction about the biscuit, which should be well beaten and thoroughly baked to prevent their getting muddy.

Opening the door, I stopped out on the back porch, and, to my astonishment, caught the doctor pelting and pounding at a batch of dough. The dough looked rather dark, to be sure, and the doctor slightly embarrassed, but not to the ceremonious, I said,

"Really, doctor, this is very considerate in you to make the biscuit for yourself."

When [illegible] surprised and disturbed. "Go [illegible] c-c-cook. I'm making [illegible] my patients to-morrow."

"In the name of Æsculapius, how many do you make at a time?"

"Oh," said he, "a p-p-p-p-pack, more, or less. Practice in these mountains is different from your city practice. I make my rounds only once a month, and it takes a week's riding to get through, so that I have to provision a whole district to last until I come again."

In the morning we were on the road betimes, all in fine spirits except Cockney, who was a little sore from yesterday's ride, but did his best not to mind it.

The country was wild and rugged enough, but more populous than we had imagined. The doctor called at every house, and at his familiar halloo all the inmates, from the bobbing centenarian to the toddling yearling, flocked out to greet him. He inquired after their welfare, physicked and vowed, in a most kind and fatherly manner, nursing such as had been ailing at his last visit.—Having audited all their complaints, he would leave one or two teacupfuls of pills and ride on. Sometimes he took the trouble to dismount and enter the cabin of some delicate patient; at others he would simply [illegible] a family living far back in the woods, and leave a measure of pills to be sent over next Sunday. Occasionally he had the luck to meet a customer on the road, and delivered his monthly allowance on the spot. The doctor was evidently honored and beloved by the whole country, and consulted on all questions that arose, in law, agriculture, and politics. He was a sturdy Democrat, and dispensed gratuitous opinions on this subject as freely as he did his blue-pills. He stuttered scarcastically against medical [illegible], and thought the laws were not sufficiently severe against them. Some years ago as so-called herb doctor came poaching upon his domain, and was a great grief of mind to him. The fellow was civil and wouldn't quarrel, but secretly undermined the practitioner, was getting all his patients, and running the health of the district.

The interloper had two weaknesses—he was fond of backgammon and hated snakes. Didiwick cared no more for snakes than he did for fishing worms, so he took all opportunities to bedevil his rival with practical jokes in which serpents played a leading part.

One day he challenged the herb doctor to a game of backgammon. Pleased with the unusual civility, he accepted, and seated himself at the table where the box lay closed before him. The tavern loungers, aware that something was up, gathered round to witness the game.

"Set the board doctor," said Didiwick "while I go and order two juleps."

The doctor opened the board, and a [illegible] foot black snake leaped out upon his face. He fled, and returned no more.

An Incident of the Royal Thanksgiving Procession.

I myself had the happiness of witnessing the most protracted, if not the most convincing, proof of loyalty that occured throughout the day. Close to my [illegible] position on a [illegible] barrel in Hyde Park, was a tall but slender lime tree, ill-fitted to sustain the weight of any full grown spectator, and protected by a wire guard from any such assault; but as the time drew on for the arrival of the procession, even the cough of [illegible] upon [illegible] laugh [illegible] impossible [illegible] of its spring shoots, so [illegible] up to [illegible] by the [illegible] pole with a [illegible] of [illegible] at the top for a prize.

"Come down," cried the voice of authority; "you are spoiling the shoots. Come down, I say."

"I [illegible] of the Queen [illegible] the Prince of Wales," exclaimed the [illegible] [illeg

PETERBOROUGH, MAY 16TH, 1872.

Editorial Items.

Mr. Rackett wishes us to state that the Band will play on the Court House Green, on Thursday evening next, 23rd of May.

THE South Simcoe News says: Fall Wheat, in this locality looks very bad, a great many farmers are plowing up their fields and sowing other grain instead.

We regret to learn that Mrs. Matchett, Otonabee, was thrown out of her carriage on Saturday—caused by the horses having run away—and received severe injuries of a serious nature, but we hope not fatal. Since writing the above we are pleased to learn she is much better.

THE SCHOOL BOARD.—There are some members of this board who have not yet honored it with their presence. We do not think it right that any gentleman should accept so responsible an office without making an effort to discharge its duties. We suggest to them that there are others who would probably accept the office if it were vacant, and endeavor to now and again form a "quorum."

TREE PLANTING.—We are glad to see that our Council is making an effort to beautify the town by supplying trees free to those who will plant them. This year they are too late to effect much, but we hope that another spring will see them earlier in the woods.

SMALL POX.—We understand there are a few cases of Small Pox in town, but we believe only a few cases. Care should be taken that little access to those affected be allowed. Although this disease is very much dreaded, where proper care is taken there need not be undue uneasiness either as to fatality or "marking."

THE whole police force of Toronto, except the officers, was dismissed by the Commissioners, on Monday, cause—expressed dissatisfaction with the treatment received.

ANOTHER FIRE IN TORONTO.—On last Sunday morning another fire in Toronto consumed the remainder of the celebrated Iron Block. Loss about $150,000, only partial Insurance.

MURDER—In a Philadelphia Penitentiary, three criminals were lately condemned to fifteen years solitary confinement, for an outrage on a girl of 14 years. Two of the convicts named Webb alias Buck, and Trimbour, aged respectively 17 and 24 years, were placed in the same cell for want of room. They had long been on very intimate terms and sought to be together. On the night of the 7th inst., however, without any known provocation Buck murdered Trimbour.

THE Hamilton Spectator says: There are about 1000 men in that city now out of employment on account of the 'strike.' The men are determined to hold ont against the employers, and the employers are as determined not to be forced into terms. Manufacturing establishments in the city are therefore closed. This nine hour movement is so wide spread that it will require some time to settle it. As to grant the demand will to some extent cause considerable change in trade. Perhaps payment by the hour would furnish a solution of the present difficulties.

RUNAWAY.—A horse of Mr. Calcutt's by some means ran away and dashed with a large wagon up the sidewalk until the awning posts offered such resistance as caused the noble animal to get clean out of its harness just at Mr. Connal's door. We think a little more care with horses would make people a little less timid as they walked through our streets. Fortunately no one was hurt.

Our enterprising neighbor, Mr. Henry Calcutt, has just launched a fine little steamer to ply on Rice Lake and the Otonabee River. Success to you friend Calcutt, your pluck will we hope be crowned with success.

IN our police report of last week we were made to say that Mr. Ludgate had offered some lumbermen more wages by $3 a month than Mr. Hazlitt. We were not quite correct, as the fact was that the men had formerly hired with Mr. Hazlitt at $3 a month more than they subsequently hired to Mr. Ludgate for. We immediately used language which might leave the impression that Mr. Ludgate may have induced men from Mr. Hazlitt which was doing him an injustice. We gladly make the correction.

CANADA MONTHLY.—We have received the May number of this excellent monthly. The contents are:—The growth of Canadian Commerce; The Wisdom of the East; Dinah Blake's revenge; Forsaken, a poem; Our Pioneer Bishop; The Nine Hour Movement; Books; Let us use our Boat; Marguerite Kneller; The Bard; Yachting; Eloise; Old Age; Great Britain, Canada and the United States; Translations and Selections, &c. The Canadian Monthly, as a Canadian Publication, deserves a large circulation. Adams Stevenson & Co., are the publishers, but it can be obtained at any of the Book Stores.

QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY.—At the public meeting held on Friday last, a committee consisting of Messrs. Blomfield, Calcutt, O'Donnell, &c., was appointed to co-operate with the Cricket Club in arranging for the celebration of the Queen's Birthday. The committee met on Monday evening and drew out a programme of which we give an outline. The sports will commence at 2 p. m. with a Lacrosse match, followed by six competitions in running and jumping, after which the Lacrosse match will be concluded, and then will follow six more competitions in running, jumping, throwing ball, &c. The competitions will be open to all comers, and the entry money to each competition will be 25 cts. When there are six entries for any competion $2; when more than six $3 will be added to the entry money, and the judges on the ground will determine before each competition the number and amount of the prizes. When there are less than six entries the entry money will constitute the prize. 15 cents will be charged for admission to the ground and 10 extra to the stand. Members of the cricket club will require to present their tickets at the gate, or pay the above fee. The Peterboro Fire Company and their guests in uniform have been invited to visit the ground and witness the sports free of charge.

The County Council are gathering [illegible] inst., to vote debentures for the use of some of the local Companies which desire to aid the Lindsay and Fenelon Falls Railway to connect somewhere east to take the trade of [illegible] Toronto.

The people of the North say they are tired waiting for Peterboro to build a road to them and they almost think the time is far for that comes. Too true! We would suggest that as our people are now of one opinion and are determined to get a road north, that a few weeks delay will show them that we are in earnest and that a road will reach them from their own County town. Don't be rash, gentlemen. Don't be unpatriotic. Your own county has the first claim on you—what helps Peterboro helps you. We cannot see that Peterboro will gain much by sending our trade to Toronto.

The Washington Treaty.

EXPLANATIONS.

The English and American Governments have at last been able it appears to agree on a satisfactory solution to the vexed question of settling "consequential damages," and it may therefore be expected that the Alabama Claims and all other present claims, will be amicably settled by the Geneva Arbitration.

The latest telegrams give Mr. Gladstone's explanation in the Imperial House of Commons. He says, on the 18th of January, the Government first learned of the American claims for Indirect damages, had been presented at Geneva.

Her Majesty's Government protested on the 3rd of February that the indirect claims were not within the scope of the Treaty of Washington, nor within the intention of either party to the Treaty. Secretary Fish replied in April that he thought the Geneva Board ought to decide the whole question. The tone of Mr. Fish's despatch was most courteous. In the meantime a communication was received from Gen Schenck, American Minister, suggesting another course, which would be acceptable to England and America. This was to interchange notes, setting forth the views, terms and conditions whereon both would agree to proceed to arbitration. We accepted this suggestion, continued Mr. Gladstone, and carried on correspondence altogether by telegraph. On Wednesday, the 8th inst., President Grant submitted a proposition to the United States Senate. On Thursday we ascertained that that position was not precisely as we understood it should be, because of the brevity of the cable despatch on which it was based. On Friday a draft, conveying letters of our views was forwarded to Minister Schenck, and although lengthy was immediately telegraphed by him to Washington on Saturday. General Schenck informed Lord Granville that the President had accepted and the Senate entertained that draft. He (Mr. Gladstone) thought this fact was almost equivalent to a ratification. He begged for a further forbearance of the House, now that the question was approaching a satisfactory issue, honorable alike to both nations. If successful in this negociation, Her Majesty's Government had a right to exact praise for settling such a momentous question. The last proposal on the part of Great Britain sustained the position taken by the Government in the Queen's speech at the beginning of the present session. Mr. Gladstone in conclusion said he thought he was not too sanguine in predicting that the negotiations would result in a settlement which would redound to the credit of both parties.

If this telegram be true, the Alabama bugbear kept up so long for American electioneering purposes is likely to receive its quietus soon, and all Her Majesty's subjects agree in expressing the hope that the settlement may redound to the credit of the parties interested.

Railway or no Railway.

Again the people of Peterboro' have an opportunity of saying whether they are to endeavour to secure the trade of the North, or quietly fold their hands and let Bowmanville and Toronto take it from them.

The Marmora Company having arranged to buy out Fowler, are prepared to build their Railway to Fenelon Falls for $80,000; asking no pay until the road reaches Mud Lake, then $40,000; on reaching Bobcaygeon, $20,000; and on reaching Fenelon, $20,000 more.

It is now or never. Fowler being out of the way there is no longer a question as to the ability of the parties to perform.

No payment is asked till their road is built, so there is no question of risk of our money.

The Company offer to bind themselves not to amalgamate with any other line, so there is no danger of collision.

Toronto is at work to extend the Nipissing.

Bowmanville has very large bonuses granted for the construction of their line Bobcaygeon.

Fenelon has now a By-law before the people to vote a bonus to the Bowmanville Road.

Fenelon and Bobcaygeon will throw themselves in with us if we are prompt.

We have every thing to gain by action, every thing to loose by delay.

The friends of other roads are raising side issues, trying their old trick of setting up some other scheme in order to defeat this. Afraid to oppose it squarely, they try some one side issue, but with the object of defeating what they don't wish to carry.

Our limits are now extended, and the new territory will bear its share of the burden as well as reap its share of the benefit.

Whenever before, we refused to listen to the projects of railway extension we suffered immense loss. Now we cannot play with the matter, because on every side others are trying to catch the prize. Let our townsmen then act together harmoniously for the public good, and with the energy and spirit that the exigency requires.

Let the voices of those only who are known to act the part of honorable, true citizens, be heard. Then and then only may we hope for that prosperity and success which is to be enjoyed by those who are willing to help themselves.

The Ottawa and Toronto Railway.

Some of our citizens urge that we should husband all our resources in order to secure this railway.

The parties who now take this position, have unfortunately acted so peculiarly in the past, that we are compelled to scrutinise their motives in order to be enabled to weigh their advice.

When the Cobourg road four years ago offered to build to Mud Lake for $30,000 they opposed the scheme. The consequence was the immediate loss of two great mills and an expenditure of $50,000 a year now spent at Harwood. Then we lost the benefit which would have accrued from the building of Smith, Green & Ellis; Mowry, and Boyd's Mills at Mud Lake, as certainly would have resulted on the construction of the railway to the lake.

Next, when the Grand Junction people came to Peterboro, the same parties said "What do you expect at Peterboro, there is not trade for one railway, there is nothing here for you," and they were hardly civil to them.

Then Cobourg came to the front, and [illegible] people said, "Never, in a morning, and the Cobourg road is a long way, and the Peterborough is what we want, that they have had the pleasure for Railroads.

Now the Marmora Company offers a road to Fenelon, and up jump these people and say "We must husband our strength for the Ottawa and Toronto Road."

Meanwhile our opportunity is fast passing from us, and these gentlemen are laughing in their sleeve.

We will be glad to see both the Grand Junction and the Ottawa Railways, and as many more as please to come, but our strength is in securing the trade that lies in to us, the trade of our county.

What do most of the towns in Canada depend on but their surrounding country, and it there is any extra prosperity, it is because they enjoy the trade of a large country, or because they encourage manufactures. We want to increase our country trade by getting north, and by keeping away Bowmanville, Lindsay, and Toronto.

What did the Grand Trunk do for the towns on the front? Nothing. The Ottawa road will serve us just in proportion as we have a large trade to be served. It will be a convenience, and it will bring in stuff to be manufactured, or bring out our manufactures, but it will not make the country tributary to us much longer. The lumber trade and the lumber and agricultural land north of us is our strength. Let us no longer be bamboozled and humbugged by men whose course in the past does not now entitle them to lead.

Much responsibility rests with our Council and with those whose position and judgment entitles them to lead public opinion. A milk and water course will not succeed. There must be action and union to insure success. Without these the enemies who are continually sowing tares, will have the harvest—though indeed that harvest may be tares—but as it is not the good of the town they aim at, they will laugh at their success and not weep at our calamity.

COUNTY COUNCIL.

The Council met in Special Session, on Wednesday, (yesterday) to consider the propriety of passing a By-law to grant $55,000 to the Lindsay, Fenelon Falls & Ottawa River Railway Co., by the Townships of Dysart, Minden, Galway, Snowdon and Stanhope.

The Warden read a report, and Messrs. M[illegible]oughlan, Moher, Burgess, Parker and F. Peck, were named a committee on the address.

A petition signed by 108 persons from the Back Townships was placed before the Council, asking for the passing of a By-law so as to be submitted to the Ratepayers of those Townships, to grant $40,000 to the above Railway Co'y.

In the discussion it was found that Galway and Stanhope are opposed to the By-law.

On motion of S. S. Peck, seconded by Mr. McDonald, a By-law to grant aid to said Co'y as asked for in said petition. The petition asks for $55,000, while the By-law provides for only $40,000.

The Warden submitted the opinion of Mr. W. H. Scott, Barrister, on the matter of Proposed By-law. This was read in Council.

On motion of Mr. Choate, seconded by Mr. Sanderson, Messrs. Millar, Sanderson, Brown, A. Clegg, Burges, Collins, Irwin, J. P. Brown, and the mover were named a committee to examine and take legal advice if necessary, and report on the proposed By-law for granting aid to the Lindsay, Fenelon Falls and Ottawa River Railway By-law.

The Council adjourned till to-morrow morning.

The Warden's Address will be given next week.

Smith Court of Revision.

SMITH, 13th May, 1872.

The first sitting of the Court of Revision for the current year was held on the 10th inst.

The following appeals were made:

William Young appealed against the assessment of $350 personal property—assessment reduced to $247.

James Stewart appealed against his assessment of $500 personal property—reduced to $200 upon his making the declarion required by law.

William Wood appealed against the assessment of the house he occupies as being exempted by statute—assessment confirmed.

George McKee appealed against the assessment of the S.E. ½ of Lot 14 in the 5th Con—assessment confirmed.

T. J. Nelson appealed against the assessment of certain village lots in the village of Lakefield—assessment confirmed.

German Brooks appealed against the assessment of his Woolen Factory.

Moved by Mr. Montgomery, seconded by Mr. Fitzgerald—That whereas this Council at its last sitting did, (under the impression that the Woolen Factory occupied by Mr. Brooks in this Township, would remain part thereof,) agree to exempt the said Factory from Municipal taxes for the term of 5 years, but deferred the passing of a By-law to confirm such agreement until the present meeting. And whereas the Lieut. Governor has, in the interval, issued his proclamation declaring that from and after the 1st day of January next, the said property shall be attached to the Town of Peterborough: Be it therefore resolved that the appeal of Mr. Brooks do lay over until information be obtained what power this Council has in the premises. Carried.

The Court then adjourned until the 27th inst.

The members then went into Council for despatch of Township business.

A petition from James Kearney and others was received and read praying that a road near Young's point be allowed. Laid over to next meeting of the Council.

The Treasurer was directed to pay the following sums:

To John Peterson for four furnished William Adams, $3.00. To John Walton journey to Toronto and other expenses incurred in the endeavor to prevent the extension of the town of Peterborough so to include part of the township of Smith, $20.00. To C. Barton drawing Map of the extension of the Town and part of the adjoining Townships, stationery, &c. $10.00. To John Quinn an indigent person, $3.00.

Moved by Mr. Fitzgerald, seconded by Mr. Montgomery—That the sum of $700 be expended in the general repairs of the Roads and Bridges, said sum to be divided as follows, viz:—$100 to the North Ward, and $100 to each of the remaining Wards. Carried.

The Pacific Railway

[illegible] Already our readers are aware that the Pacific Railway Bill has passed the House of Commons, and is now before the Senate. It is to be hoped that the Senate will not attempt to found a Pacific Railway Bill, although both parties are already in favour of the proposed Pacific Railway. There will supply material for the resolutions.

It is true, that heretofore John A. and Cartier have been supported by a slavish majority ready to vote for the wildest schemes these leaders might propose; but we can hardly imagine that such can be found so regardless of the Country's interests as to support them in the policy, fore-shadowed in these resolutions. Sir John A. & Co. propose granting a money bonus of Thirty Millions of dollars; and a land bonus of Fifty Millions of acres, in alternate blocks, along the route. The money they have not, and will consequently have to borrow, at perhaps high rates of interest, as capitalists will be able to understand the reckless rate at which our debt is being increased, if partisan politicians do not see.

In the whole North West Territory and British Columbia, within the prescribed limits, there are not 50,000,000 acres. It will require 15,000,000 acres additional to make up the deficiency, and these 15,000,000 acres are to be taken in some other part of the Dominion.

They also propose placing the power in the hands of the Government of giving the building of the road to whomsoever they please, if the tenders be not satisfactory. This would enable them to corrupt the country completely by giving the work in sections to persons who would unscrupulously use their influence and perhaps a portion of the funds, to secure the retention of power to John A. a while longer.—Wm. McDougall boasted that the $15,000,000 for the Intercolonial was sufficient to keep any government in power 15 years. Upon this method of calculation, they may be basing the assumption that the $100,000,000 necessary for the construction of the Pacific Railway is sufficient to keep them in power during their lives.

The folly of the Government scheme must be apparent to every one. The cry of the country for years has been, "Settle our wild land at once." Induce immigration, and extend the "free grant system to all the wild lands of the Dominion."

By the system proposed at Ottawa, these lands are to be given away, and sold in part to reimburse the Government. How will they therefore be in a position to offer inducements to people to come to the country, or to our farmers sons to remain in it? In the words of a cotemporary:

Was anything more outrageous ever heard of—to take the great bulk of all the valuable crown lands in the whole Dominion, and hand them over to a Railway Company, to lock up entirely, or sell at what exorbitant prices it pleases. It is acknowledged that the only hope we have of attracting immigration and making our prairies and forests the abodes of civilization, is by offering the public lands as free grants, or at a mere nominal value, yet here we have a proposal, to take such measures as will effectively check immigration, and hinder progress. Without immigration too, we can never bear the intolerable burdens which year after year are being added, and of which this Thirty million dollar grant is a good example. Debt and taxation accumulating and population stationary—the means of payment sacrificed by the very party that contracts the obligation! The thing is the very extreme of blind folly.

But not only do the Government propose thus to cripple the country by alienating its public domain; they further propose to give these lands and this Thirty Million Dollars to whomsoever, and on whatsoever conditions they please—not directly of course; that would be too great an outrage on decency to be openly perpetrated, but indirectly, by means of an alternative they are sure to bring about. It amounts practically to making the road a Government job, with fat contracts, sinecures, patronage, &c., &c., to the tune of one hundred millions. After our experience of Grand Trunk jobbery, and loss, we earnestly hope the House will have the good sense not for an instant to countenance another such transation.

The New Tory Champion of Falsehood.

SOME EXTRACTS FROM "THE PONDEROUS TOME OF MISREPRESENTATION, COMPILED (BY "MAIL" EDITORS) FOR THE EDIFICATION OF CREDULOUS FOOLS."

(From the Hamilton Evening Times.)

The Mail is improving—in its own peculiar fashion. Since its birth it has generally been satisfied with one or two large sized fibs per day, but on Thursday it positively reeked with them. They leaked out at every pore, they broke out, in a small-pox sort of eruption, on every possible spot of the sheet's surface. If the effort has not exhausted the editors, their powers of falsification must be inexhaustible. We quote some of the sayings of that day, which must henceforth be held in honor by all the Mail subscribers as the one on which the editors surpassed even themselves in their favorite employment of playing havoc with the truth. Here are some of the gems:—

They (the Reformers) denounced the Railway Fund, as a colossal peril, and then increased it by $2,400,000.

Totally untrue. The Reformers never denounced the Railway Fund, but always spoke of it with approval. What they did denounce was the corrupt principle of permitting five men to have the uncontrolled expenditure of so enormous a sum and that they remedied at the earliest possible moment after their entry on office.

They yelled for economy and promised parsimoniousness, then added $400,000 to the Province's expenditure.

Totally untrue. For years they denounced Sandfield Macdonald's penuriousness and cheese-paring, as detrimental to the best interests of the Province, and called for a more liberal expenditure for the promotion of immigration, the opening up of the Province and the general development of our resources. John Sandfield was too narrow mentally, and too sordid in disposition to do anything with the surplus moneys of the Province but hoard them like a miser, and then make periodical boasts of how much he had laid by.

They were gibbering loyalists a month ago; now they abuse the Mother country with the ferocity of a released Fenian prisoner.

Totally untrue. They have never said more against the Washington Treaty or the Mother country than Sir John A. Macdonald and his colleagues did in the famous despatch of the 20th of July. They never said as much against the Mother country as Sir John A. and his colleagues did in the correspondence with the Imperial Government on the Fenian claims. They never said a tenth as much against the Mother country as has the Ottawa Citizen, Sir John A. Macdonald's local mouthpiece and special organ. They never even approached the outspoken disloyalty of Howe, Sir John's colleague in the Government, or of Macdougall, Sir John's quasi independent tool.

Five years ago Sir John A. Macdonald was their joy and pride—to-day they—must find words enough to malign him.

Totally untrue. Sir John was never their joy and pride, and never will be. He was simply tolerated as a sort of necessary evil during the working out of the Confederation scheme. The only [illegible] shown him by the Reform [illegible] during that session, was to [illegible] abuse [illegible] Reform [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

In Canada, as to Britain, Kerosene Oyster.

A gentleman who had occasion to [illegible] Sir John [illegible] spoken of in introducing the Washington Treaty Bill, on being asked what he thought of it, said "Sir John spoke and acted as a lawyer "would in defending a prisoner whom "he knew to be guilty, who had made "damaging admissions against himself, "and when he felt that the jury knew "as well as he did, that he [illegible] "worthless tale and ridiculous."

Although the report of his speech may appear plausible at first sight, one can readily imagine that a man of Sir John's ability must have felt seriously the humiliating position in which he was placed. He might dissect others, but could not absolve himself, and the lack of belief in his own arguments must evidently have been felt by his hearers.

Certainly—considering the import of it, we may safely say that no speech was ever made in Canadian Parliament more humiliating to our country, more discreditable to the speaker, more degrading to the British race, and more likely to bring trouble and disaster upon us in the future. A young country requires a healthy, vigorous, national spirit, a confidence in itself and in its own powers. A statesman who spreads doubts and fears, who openly encourages indecision, hesitation and faint-heartedness, who sets himself as a public leader to break down the self-confidence of his people, to train them to cowardice and to advocate mercenary surrenders of national honor and national rights, is a traitor to his country, and a more dangerous foe than the most powerful foreign enemy.

It must ever be remembered that strength ever comes from within. The battle is not always to the strong, or the race to the swift. Pluck and national sentiment are, after all, the real [illegible] of [illegible] thousands of Englishmen, with the old spirit in them that made England great, soldiers who have not had the British feeling worn out of them by trade or politics, rule absolutely hundreds of millions of people in India [illegible], becoming by superior morale, bow down and submit to the handful who govern them.

Had the great Havelock, with his few hundred Englishmen at Cawnpore, surrounded by 50,000 trained sepoys, been emasculated by the trembling spirit of our Parliament, the world have surrendered because the odds against him were so great, and some of the most brilliant exploits of Britons that our history records would have given place to a black stain of faint-heartedness and cowardice.

Sir John appealed mainly to the fears of the House—to pass the Manitoba Act he threatened his followers with a war of races, or a French rebellion in Quebec, and now to pass this bill, he again appeals to the fears of our representatives. England might get into a war if we do not let the Yankees have whatever they set their hearts upon. She might tell us that we must protect our fisheries ourselves. Untold evils might arise so he went on, not one word did he utter of confidence in ourselves or in the Empire, not one word of self-reliance or self-confidence in our people, not one word of hope for our future. And this is the man who pretends to represent the progressive Dominion of Canada, to represent the national sentiment which is a live sentiment in our young men. We warn him again, and we warn every member in the House, to be ware how they run counter to this sentiment. Great strides have been made since the last election in the growth and force of this feeling, and those men who shut their eyes to it, are blind as moles to these signs of the times, and will get a rude awakening when they come to give their account to their constituents, if they dare, from wretched fears, or mere mercenary motives, to bring discredit upon our native land.—Toronto Telegraph.

The Toronto "Mail" and the Provincial Treasurer.

We were among those who hailed with satisfaction the appearance of a respectable organ of high toned Toryism in Toronto, to set a decent example to the small fry in the country, who were so much in need of a high standard. We were in hopes that Canadian Toryism like the party that bears the designation in England, might be made respectable and truth telling. There is no reason why Toronto should not have a decent Tory mouth piece. Hamilton has a respectable Conservative paper in the Spectator and the Montreal Gazette is another paper which does the party no discredit. There is any amount of fustian writing in the Mail, but in principle it is not one whit ahead of the papers which it is endeavoring to supersede and kill out. It is not perhaps quite so stupid as the Leader, nor so dare-devil as the Telegraph, but being the special organ and apologist of Sir John A. McDonald, it could not be expected to be very scrupulous, as to the truth and fairness of its utterances. The stupid illiterate race of Tories have their organ in the Leader The sneaks may well be content with the Telegraph, and the swells and snobs will hold up the Mail as their exclusive representative. Of the three classes the last is the most contemptible, and their representative is not destined to be lasting. Neither is it receiving the popular support commanded by its two riva's on its own side of the House, not to speak of the Globe, whose position is impregnable.

That the Mail has got some up to the standard set for it, is to be regretted. That it lacks principle and brain power, is abundantly evident. That it is endeavouring to fill the commands of a corrupt and unprincipled politician under cover of a respectable exterior is equally apparent. The contradiction of this position in giving to the utterances of the Mail, a [illegible] which renders the reading of its lucubrations an irksome task. The Editor in chief of the Mail has written perhaps fifteen articles on the Provincial Treasurer's Insurance of the Public Buildings, and now, we begin to see the motive for the sustained barking of the organ. The local House unanimously passed a vote of $5000 for the purpose of insuring the Provincial buildings. Mr. McKenzie took advantage, for the Province, of his own position as President of the Isolated Risks Insurance Company, to get this sum of $5,000 to insure $420,000 for three years, the rate being considerably less than one half per cent per annum; the policies being accordingly and distributed between seven different offices, and all the best, doing business in the Province. There never was a better financial arrangement made for the public. Then why does the Mail write fifteen articles on the matter, and get all the small fry of country organs to grind a tune they don't understand? The Hamilton Times tells the secret. It appears that when the Editor in chief of the Mail was a clerk in the Provincial Secretary department, he asked Mr. McKenzie an increase of salary, it was refused, he then asked a smaller increase, this was also denied. He then asked for pay for the full month on which he had entered, but was told that he would be paid for the time he had worked if he was going to leave. He then tendered his resignation which was to his intense disgust, immediately accepted, and this is the way the Mail found an Editor in chief, and this is the hidden mystery of these attacks on Mr. McKenzie. It is a splendid tribute to the purity of a man's life that his bitter personal enemies—and every man who endeavors to do his duty has them—are driven to fabrication to find a charge against him. Mr. McKenzie may well laugh at the weak effeminate vapouring of the Mail and of all the organs by of small organs.—Westminster Sentinel.

The Pacific Railway.

On Friday last Sir George Cartier, in the House of Commons, introduced a Bill relative to the Pacific Railway, and explained the Government scheme for the construction of that work. Most of the facts are well-known. By the terms of the union with British Columbia, the Dominion Government undertakes to construct a line of railway across the continent, connecting the seaboard of the Pacific with the railway system of Canada, within ten years from the date of the Union, by the completion of Lake [illegible], and not by the Government; work is to be commenced on the Pacific coast, building the line eastward, and at the Rocky Mountains, working westward at the same time. The financial basis is a grant of fifty million acres of the public lands to a company, or companies, and a cash subsidy of $30,000,000, a portion of which will carry the Imperial guarantee. A distance 2,700 miles is assumed as the length of the road from its eastern terminus, Lake Nipissing, to the Pacific coast. The subsidy of 20 miles on each side of the railway, in alternate blocks, will be given throughout the entire distance, but as this grant will amount to but two-thirds of fifty millions of acres promised, the balance will be made up from other lands belonging to the Dominion. Power is taken in the bill to make a contract with any one company having $10,000,000 capital, with $3,000,000 paid into the hands of the Receiver General, or with a company formed of the different companies seeking incorporation, or the Government may grant a charter to capitalists without the intervention of Parliament. Both in the substance of Sir George Cartier's statement.

Success in managing this elephant depends largely upon the set of circumstances under which the job is undertaken. Is world-be[illegible]th is fast in History a parallel to the attempt by four millions of people to accomplish such a task in less than a decade. The very idea is still hooted at in some quarters; and incredulous laggers are to be found who describe the undertaking as a physical impossibility. That it is not such the exploratory surveys are there to prove.—Hamilton Times.

GENEVA ARBITRATION.

Mr. Gladstone's Explanation in the House of Commons.

(By Telegraph to the Globe.)

LONDON, May 13.—In the House of Commons this evening, Mr. Gladstone made his promised explanation of the [illegible] Treaty. The House was full, and the galleries were crowded.

Mr. Gladstone on rising was greeted with cheers. He said that in order to allow an opportunity for discussion on the statements he was about to make he would bring a formal motion for the adjournment of the House. After alluding in terms of praise to the forbearance shown by Parliament during the controversy, he said he would commence his narrative of its progress with the 18th January, when it became known to him that the claims for indirect damages had been prepared at Geneva in the American case. Her Majesty's Government protested on the 3rd of February that the indirect claims were not within the scope of the Treaty of Washington, nor within the intention of either party to the Treaty. Secretary Fish replied in April that he thought the Geneva Board ought to decide the whole question. The tone of Mr. Fish's despatch was most courteous. In the meantime a communication was received from General Schneck, the American Minister, suggesting another course which would be acceptable to England and America. This was to interchange notes, setting forth the views, terms and conditions, whereon both would agree to proceed to arbitration. We accepted this suggestion, continued Mr. Gladstone, and carried on correspondence altogether by telegraph. On Wednesday, the 8th inst., President Grant submitted a proposition to the United States Senate; and on the Thursday we ascertained that the proposition was not precisely as we understood it should be, because of the brevity of the cable despatch on which it was based. On Friday, a draft conveying the letter of our views was forwarded to Minister Schneck, and altho' lengthy was immediately telegraphed by him to Washington. On Saturday Gen. Schneck informed Lord Granville that the President had accepted and the Senate entertained that draft. Mr. Gladstone thought this fact was almost equivalent to ratification. He begged further for the longer forbearance of the House, now that the question was approaching a satisfactory issue, honorable alike to both nations. If successful in this negotiation, Her Majesty's Government had a right to expect praise for settling a momentous question.—The last proposal on the part of Great Britain sustained the position taken by the Government in the Queen's speech at the beginning of the present session. Mr. Gladstone, in conclusion, said he thought he was not too sanguine in predicting that the negotiations would result in a settlement which would expound to the credit of both parties.

As Mr. Gladstone took his seat there was loud and repeated cheering from all parts of the House.

Mr. Disraeli followed, with thanks to the Premier for his statement, and he should not seek to embarrass the Government. Whatever difference existed on the other subjects, all parties were united in the desire for a peaceful and honourable settlement.

The notorious Father McMahon, who accompanied the first Fenian raid into Canada, and was captured after the battle of Ridgeway, and kept in prison a couple of years, died at Reynold's Station, Ind., on Saturday last, after a brief illness.

THE FUNERAL OF THE LATE LORD MAYO.—The State ceremonial in connection with the late Lord Mayo's funeral took place in Dublin on the 25th April. Vast crowds lined the streets through which the procession passed, the Lord Lieutenant being the chief mourner, and the representative of the Sovereign. The cavalcade, having traversed the principal streets of the city, halted opposite the Royal barracks, where the remains were taken charge by an escort of the King's Dragoon Guards for the conveyance to Palmerston House Naas, where the private funeral took place on the 26th.

The Organs of the high toned John A. are just now making a terrible effort to destroy the moral standing of Messrs McKenzie & Blake, preparatory to the next elections for the Dominion. This infamous game is in the interest of John A., if not directly dictated by him it is entirely worthy of the author of the double shuffle and of the man who disgraced the Province by his public appearance, even in the presence of distinguished strangers. Mr. Blake the Premier of Ontario and Mr. McKenzie his able leader in the Commons are too well known to be victims of Tory slang. The support which they received in the Local House, though elected under the auspices of John Sandfield Macdonald, is a fair index of the confidence reposed in them. The Mail and its degraded followers will meet a stern rebuke from the country when it is appealed to. Think of the minion of Sir John A. McDonald endeavoring to rob men of pure and patriotic lives of their fair fame. Ontario is too intelligent for this deep laid scheme of robbery, to succeed.—Telegraph.

By the Treaty of Frankfort it was stipulated that the Rhine must remain free to Germany, that all the passengers of the nations of Europe should have the right of choosing the route on which they would go, and that no duty should be levied on the river. When this treaty was made it was supposed by the French that the Germans would forget upon the Rhine the means of choosing between Germany or France for the country, but they have discovered that their choice lies in the doing one or the other. Those remaining in Alsace, after having chosen French nationality, will soon cease to be regarded by the law as Prussians. This even applies to minors. The decision causes terrible distress in the conquered province. Experience has almost invariably proved that countries annexed by force are, in Europe at least, of more trouble than they are worth, and it is not improbable that Prussia may find this the case with her annexations.—Leader.

A Glasgow professor has just discovered that a mass of ice placed upon a wire gauze, will, upon the application of slight pressure, pass through the gauze, resuming its shape and nearly all its weight, and reappear a solid mass on the other side. Another phase of this singular principle is that a wire, drawn across a mass of ice, hanging down an weighted at each end, will cut its way through the ice, pretty rapidly, while the ice will close behind it and offer no firm resistance to any attempt at cleavage where the wire went through as at any other point. How little we know of the properties of things which are every day at our fingers' ends.

It has often been the subject of remark that never in the history of the world where three powerful nations represented by men of such commanding intellect as those now foremost in the ruling councils of Britain, Germany and Austria. With regard to the premier of the first, even his bitterest foes must admit his unrivalled intellectual power, although it may be permitted to doubt his discretion; and with regard to Prince Bismarck and Count Beust, it is worthy of note that they are both men well versed in the workings of the British constitution by long residence in England, and that they have not only at various times expressed the strongest admiration of its institutions, but have exerted their vast influence almost entirely in the direction of assimilating those of their own countries to the British model.

At the last Revision Court of the Township of McNab, an appeal was made against the assessment of the Rev. H. Osborn, for personal property to the amount of $15,090, on the ground that the lumber was sold to J. Benedict & Son, of Albany, in the State of New York. The Court held the appeal good, and though the personal property was still at Braeside, they expressed their inability to impose the rate upon Messrs. Benedict, as they held no real property in Canada, and the taxes could not be collected; consequently the taxes on $15,000 were lost to the township.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL

Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six of some of the best. Oils that are here, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in various ways, proportioned of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Even in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Whenever applied you get the benefit of every drop, whereas with other preparations nearly all the oils[illegible] is lost in that way, and you get only the small of Oils which they may contain.

THERE IS NO DISEASED CONDITION OF THE BODY, in which DR. WHEELER'S Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya may not be used with positive benefit. Being a Chemical Food and Nutritive Tonic, it acts physiologically in the same manner as our diet. It perfects digestion, assimilation, and the formation of healthy blood. It sustains the vital forces by supplying the waste constantly going on, of nerve and muscle, as the result of mental and physical exertion, enabling mind and body to undergo great labor without fatigue. In action in building up constitutions broken down with Wasting Chronic Diseases, by fast living and bad habits, is truly extraordinary, its effect being immediate in energizing all the organs of the body. Phosphates being also entirely essential to cell formation and the growth of tissues, must for all time be Nature's great restorative and vitalizer.

Select Poetry.

Birds of Passage.

BY NATHAN D. URNER.

Northward, over the abodes
As the dawn glows o'er the skies,
I watch the wedge-like flocks of geese
In long array their lines.
I hear the sharp, clear notes of the leader
As he leads the hosts that follow,
Or against the current cleaves the billow,
To bleed with its gold and red

And where'er goes winging water,
Over trembling shrub and tree,
To the icy realms of the Polar Star,
And the mystic Queen Sun;
That sea, in whose search so many
Have sailed, like a dream, to be lost,
But whose stern and icy barriers
The wild geese only have crossed.

Southward, over moorland,
As the shadows of Autumn grow,
I watch the pigeons, massed in air
Like rainclouds, fleet and low;
And my fancy is never weary
Of following their flight,
Over the ever-deepening green
Of the world so warm and bright.

Over the Eden-Islands,
Set-out in the violet sea,
To some glorious glade in the Tropics' heart,
Where perchance no man may be;
Where, alone in the radiant silence,
They can build, and rear their young,
And my spirit can find with their innocence,
The peace it hath craved so long.

I would cleave the sky on the pinions
That bear the bright birds afar,
To the emerald pomp of the Southern Cross,
Or the lair of the Polar Star;
For, northward, or northward,
Or the mystic sea never sailed by ship,—
To be alone with God!

Agricultural.

About Deep Plowing.

There was never, perhaps, a better illustration of the truth of the moral drawn from the old fable of the chameleon than has been exhibited by the learned discussion the past year about the value of deep plowing. This discussion is still continued in agricultural papers and farmers' clubs. Indeed, it was in one of those last that the discussion first opened—the celebrated Farmers' Club of New York. It had been a general truth that deep soils were the best, but since our modern philosophers started the idea that deep plowing was a great injury. He had tried it, and knew whereof he spoke.

It is hard to get over the statement of that man who avers positively that the animal is black. There could not indeed be the least doubt but that those who had spoken in this way found the results to be injurious just as he had stated they were. Moreover, now comes a very careful set of experiments on corn by the Michigan College, in which many tracts of corn were planted, with the soil plowed of different depths, and just in proportion to the different depths in plowing, did the amount of the crop decrease. Besides this there are scores of cases undoubtedly genuine and truthfully stated, wherein there was undoubted loss from deep plowing.

On the other hand, thousands can testify to the fact that deep plowing has been the great foundation of success with them, and they would as soon abandon their hope of all that is blessed, as to give up this time honored and time improved practice. The animal is red to them.

There would be no harm in this if each party would only admit that the other might possibly be right. But they will not. Each fights for his favorite color. With one side there is no belief that any good crop ever came from shallow plowing, with the other skinny plow the deep subsoil is but the veriest moonshine.

But we can look on and declare the animal is white. It is either or both of the other to us, or there is the absence of any particular color as the philosophers tell us white is. We know that deep soil is sometimes an injury, and sometimes—and most generally—the deep soil has much the best of the argument. Why, then, do these experiments vary so?

There are two reasons why. The terms oil is a very indefinite one. It is not the soil which operates on plant growth. If what is in it be good, the more of that good the better. The deeper the soil the more food it contains. On the other hand, if the soil contains bad matter, of course the more of that the worse for the crop that grows in it.

Now suppose the subsoil to be filled with an overdose of iron, such for instance as many of the Montgomery county soils are, the turning of this to the surface and the turning down of the good soil below would be very bad. The deeper it is buried the worse of course. The young plant feeding in its early stages upon the surface, can make no headway through this infertile stuff. There can be no circumstance more favorable to the "heart worm" or the many other excuses which poor farmers give for bad corn crops.

Another case—We all know how much water which lodges in the soil injures a crop. Underdraining is founded on this fact. Water must go through the soil rapidly before plants will grow healthy in it. Now, if a soil is wet, retains moisture long, the deeper it is made the more water is in there, and the worse for the crop, hence has arisen the dogma in good soil culture that underdraining and subsoiling should go along together. We do not favor this principle absolutely. There are many soils that might be subsoiled without being underdrained, but these are not those which have pretentive hard-pans below where the soil is stirred.

FLOWERS.

We know of no adornation more constantly present to the mind, or one more fitting, than that which connects woman and flowers; and rarely, indeed, does the first appear more charming, or engaged in an occupation more suited to her taste, than when she is surrounded by the latter, by blossoms that have been trained and cherished by her own fair hand. We have always admired flowers as the most beautiful productions of nature. True they are fleeting, but what is there of the beautiful and lovely which is not? It may be sympathy, it may be mere imagination, but to us the thought has the force of truth, that we have never known a woman, truly pure hearted and angel minded, that did not love flowers. The things by which we are surrounded have their influence on our minds; they give the tone and coloring in a great measure to our character, and perhaps, our destiny. The man who grows up among the rocks of New England or the mountains of Switzerland, will be a different being from the one who walks the sand plains of the south, or basks lazily in the moremna of Rome. There will be a firmness of nerve and unyieldingness of purpose in the first, unknown to the last, a something caught from the country and climate, and stamped by the surrounding objects, which leaves an impression as indelible as mountains and rocks. So with woman; the hues and coloring of her mind; the graceful and the beautiful that makes up so much of her existence; the soft and the flexible, which while they seem to leave her helpless, constitute her true strength, all these things are heightened and straightened by the action of nature around her, and the fragility, and the beauty, and purity of flowers exercise no trifling influence on her heart. What is it that gives the home of the English cottager a degree of neatness and comfort so seldom seen here? It is because honeysuckles and jassamines are twining round the doors and windows; because flowers of many kinds and beautiful hues are mingled with shrubbery in the limited yard. Would that such a taste was more prevalent here. Where so much real pleasure can be purchased at so cheap a rate, so many senses be gratified at once at so truly a pity so few are found to make the effort. Flowers round a door, or clustered in a window, gives an air of happy quiet and peace of conscious security, and are a correct indication of good taste, gentle feelings, and an unbridled heart, than silver plate or marble walls.

Choice Poetry.

The End of the World.

The following lines, known as "Mother Shipton's Prophecy," were first published in 1641. It would be [illegible] part of the year [illegible] and we leave [illegible] whether we will grove at the coming ones:

[illegible] richest horses shall go
[illegible] the world with woe;
Around the world thoughts shall fly
In the twinkling of an eye;
Water shall yet more wonders do,
How strange, but shall be true;
The world upside down shall be,
And gold be found at the foot of tree;
Through hills shall ride,
And no horse touch the hills side;
Under water men shall walk,
Shall ride, shall sleep, shall talk;
In the air men shall be seen;
Iron in the water shall float
As easy as a wooden boat;
Gold shall be found, and found
In a land that's not now known;
England at last shall admit a Jew;
The world to an end shall come,
In eighteen hundred and eighty one.

Does a cow become landed property when turned into a field?

The most profitable laundry business in Washington territory—washing out gold.

An American paper, while reporting that a man in Washington had his head blown off by an explosion of gas, adds "He was not a Congressman."

A man down South was heard to boast of the mills he had worked in. It turned out that his knowledge of the treadmill was excellent.

"Name the longest day in the year," said a Pennsylvania teacher to a hopeful of five summers. "Sunday," instantly responded the little victim of Quaker strictness.

A little girl, eight years old, is begging in the streets of Oshkosh, Wis., with a paper which certifies that the bearer is a widow with five children in destitute circumstances."

An Irishman was indulging in the very intellectual occupation of sucking raw eggs and reading a newspaper, by some mischance he tried to bolt a live chicken. The poor bird chirruped as it went down his throat, and he very coolly said, "By the powers, my young friend, you spoke too late."

"A friend of mine, a veterin commanding officer of a cavalry regiment," writes Mr. Frank Buckland, the distinguished pisciculturist, "told me that he once found a moorhen's nest with eggs. Upon cracking one of the eggs he discovered that the young bird was alive, and upon the point of hatching. He put it on the ground and it immediately ran away. 'What I want to know Buckland,' said my friend, the colonel, 'is how it happened that that young bird did not know I was its mother?'

The Scientific American in calling attention to the statement of an Italian journal that the recent visit of the Russian Czar to the southern part of his empire had particular reference to the projected junction of the Caspian Sea with the Black Sea, says: "The entire length of the canal would be four hundred and thirty Russian versts, about four hundred miles; through the mountain chain to be pierced only measures eight versts, or about five miles. It is calculated that 30,000 laborers will have to be employed for fully six years in order to complete the undertaking. Quite apart from the direct commercial advantages which would result from the completion of this canal, it would serve to replenish the Caspian sea with water, a highly important consideration. During the last decade, and even longer, a remarkable reduction of the water was noticed, so much so that the final extinction, that is exsiccation, of the sea was apprehended. The result would not only be malarious in the extreme, but also destructive of a great source of wealth, namely, the sturgeon, sterlet, and the seal fisheries. Many thousand persons are at present employed in these fisheries, (chiefly at Astrachan), by whom eight hundred thousand pounds of caviar alone are annually obtained. An insurance of water supply to those persons would, therefore, give renewed stimulus to their local enterprise, though the same may not be nearly as important as the effect on commerce at large."

After war, pestilence and intemperance—colds lead to the greatest destruction of human life, mainly, because it is considered by many of no consequence and hence systematically neglected, until a simple, curable disease, is converted into a fatal pulmonary one. Everyone troubled with what is called a slight cold or cough, should immediately use Bryan,s Pulmonic Wafers—they allay irritation at once, and exert a most beneficial influence on all the Bronchial and pulmonary organs. Sold by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cts. per box.

A QUESTION.—Why will people keep four or five ill-looking sickly horses to do the work that one good horse might perform? If the horse has the heaves, is broken winded, has a cough or cold, or his wind in any way affected; if his appetite is bad, or his digestive organs deranged, has a rough skin or is hide bound, we would in all cases recommend the use of 'Darley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy'—it never fails to benefit and almost always removes the disease; it is free from anything that can injure, and may be used at all times with safety. Try it and you will be satisfied. Remember the name, and see that the signatures of Hurd & Co., is on each package. Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle, Ont., proprietors for Canada. Sold by all medicine dealers.

Fevers seldom make an attack without warning; and may often be thrown off by soaking the feet in warm water, wrapping up warm in bed, and taking two on three of "Parsons' Purgative Pills."

A Missionary just returned, says he regards "Johnson's Anodyne Liniment" as beyond all price, and efficacious beyond any other medicine. It is adapted to a great variety of special cases, and is the best pain killer in the world.

LITERATURE OF MUSIC. Music is the most beautiful language in the world, and the mind that thinks in melody must be in a blissful, happy state; but to have the mind constantly calm and serene, the body must be free from ailment and pain, and we know of nothing so well adapted to prevent sickness, or for the cure of colds, coughs, rheumatism, neuralgia, summer complaints, &c., as the "Canadian Pain Destroyer." For sale by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cents per bottle.

That iron is valuable as a medicine has long been known, but it is only since its preparation in the particular form of Peruvian Syrup that its full power over disease has been brought to light. Its effect in cases of dyspepsia and debility is most salutary.

HAVING used Fellows compound Syrup Hypophosphites for some time in my practice, I have no hesitation in recommending it to my patients who are suffering from General Debility, or any Disease of the Lungs, knowing that even in cases utterly hopeless, it affords relief. D. B. SMITH, M.D.

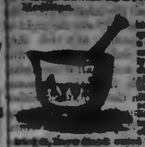
Ayer's Cathartic Pills,



[illegible] Mankind, as this excellent remedy for [illegible] complaints. Through a long series of years, and among most of the races of men it has risen higher and higher in their estimation, as it has become better known. Its authors have used every effort to cause the various affections of the lungs and throat, have made it known as a reliable preventive against them. While adapted to milder forms of disease and to young children, it is at the same time the most effectual remedy that can be given for incipient consumption, and for dangerous affections of the throat and lungs. As a preventive against sudden attacks of Croup, it should be kept on hand in every family, and indeed as all are sometimes subject to colds and coughs, all should be provided with this antidote for them.

When fully settled, Consumption is thought incurable, still great numbers of cases where the disease seemed settled, have been completely cured, and the patient restored to sound health by the Cherry Pectoral. So complete is its mastery over the diseases of the Lungs and Throat, that the most obstinate of them yield to it. Even [illegible] long also could reach them, under the Cherry Pectoral they speedily and surely disappear.

Singers and Public Speakers find great protection from it.

Asthma is always relieved and often wholly cured by it.

Bronchitis is generally cured by taking the Cherry Pectoral in small and frequent doses.

So generally are its virtues known that we need not publish the certificates of them here, or do more than assure the public that its qualities are fully maintained.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

For Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons.

As its name implies, it does Cure, and does not fail. Containing neither Arsenic, Quinine, Mercury, Zinc, nor any other mineral or poisonous substance whatever, it is perfectly harmless in any number, and the importance of its cures in the ague districts, are literally beyond account, and we believe without a parallel in the history of Ague medicine. Our pride is gratified by the acknowledgments we receive of the radical cures effected in obstinate cases, and where other remedies had wholly failed.

Thousands of persons, either resident in, or travelling through miasmatic localities, will be protected by taking the AGUE CURE daily.

For Liver Complaints, arising from [illegible] of the Liver it is an excellent remedy, stimulating the Liver into healthy activity.

For Bilious Diseases and Liver Complaints, it is an excellent remedy, producing many [illegible] cures, where other medicines had failed.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass., and sold [illegible] the world.

"Little Jennie."

BY PERSIF.

'Tis heaped with stones, but you know 'tis a grave,
This lone little spot on the prairie wild,
For on a rough, dark stone is carved,
"Little Jennie," seven-year-grandpa's child.

Close by the road runs on to the West—
The long road, homeward yearn, and old—
And through the cottage, world air,
The sun pours floods of gold.

But nothing the sun that lies there heeds,
The careless carmen moving on,
And nothing the gray rocks heaped around,
And nothing the light of the sun.

But two went on to the promised West,
While their hearts were lingering 'round the grave;
Looking back through the smiles that grew between
To see the grassy mound of a wife.

The cabin of logs, with its puncheon floor,
That was built in the land that had promised so fair,
Was and for the built of the Hosts first
That never had gathered there.

Then the little boys were born to them,
And a proud love filled the father's breast;
But the mother's heart yearned for the girl
That was buried on the road for the West.

Sometimes in her sleep a dream would come
Of a prairie flow'r's lurid glow,
Soothing across her darling's grave
And laying the grasses low.

Sometimes she saw the little face
By the cruel fangs of the gray wolves torn,
And never her ruddy boys took
The place of her first born.

And the grave is wrapped through these long, warm days
In the floods of the solemn sun;
And close by the road, all beaten and old,
To the boundless West on.

BASHFUL BOOTS.

"Tell me, Bashful Boots," I said, "how far is to Whitby?"

"Please, thir, my name ithn't Bashful Booth," answered the child, "It'th Mary Cumru."

I was just eighteen, and, after having taken my degree in the time-honored university of Pennsylvania, was making a pedestrian tour through the eastern counties of my native state. For several hours I had been traversing a wild, wooden region that the inhabitants called "the forest," and which stretches for nearly thirty miles, from the northeast, to the southwest, back to the blue ridge, between Whitby and Heidelberg. It was a primitive, picturesque district, with small farms scattered through the valleys, while the hills on either sides were densely clothed with the original forest trees. There were so many little lateral valleys, and [illegible] that, at last, I began to [illegible] lost my way.

Suddenly there rose before me, over the crest of a low hill, the chimney and roof of a time-worn, stone farm-house. The fences were moss-grown; the woods around were bushy and wild; lush grasses grew in the meadows, and the whole air was fragrant with the scent of water flowers that bloomed in the little brook near by. A scientific agriculturist would have turned from the scene in disgust. But a poet or painter would have been charmed by it. The tangled luxuriant growth carried the imagination back for a century, to the landscapes that Fielding described and Gainesborough painted.

Crossing the field between me and the house, and advancing in my direction, was a little girl. She wore an old sun-bonnet and loose sack, and carried an earthenware pitcher in her hand; yet in spite of these comparatively coarse accessories, there was a bright, intelligent look in her eyes and air almost of refinement in her face. Observing a stranger, she stopped shyly, with her finger in her mouth. It was then I addressed her.

We soon managed to get quite well acquainted. Whitby, she told me, was "just over the mountains, not more than an hour's walk." She lived with her maternal uncle, who owned the farm-house, which had been her grandfather's and her great-grandfather's before. "Papa was a minister," she said. "We lived in the city till he and mamma died."

I was about to walk on, when she asked me, slyly, if I wouldn't take a drink of milk. She was going to the spring house, she added, I assented most gladly, and she tripped gaily before me, flitting along like a free happy bird.

Have you ever, my dear reader, seen a real, old-fashioned Pennsylvania spring house? A one-storied one-roomed edifice, built over a natural spring, generally shaded by a weeping-willow, or some ancient forest tree, and floored with brick and stone? My little hostess, kneeling down, dipped some milk up from a pan, that floated in the ever-running stream, which made the circuit of the spring house inside. Never, before or since, have I had a draught so delicious.

Afterwards I sat down on the low, turfy bank outside, and chatted with my little friend.

"Do you know," she said, artlessly, "I like country better than town? You hear the birds at daybreak, you cant hunt for wild flowers. Oh! such violets and blue-bells, and quaker ladies as we have here."

"And buttercups, too, I hope."

"Yes, yes, buttercups. Do you know how to tell if you like butter?" she asked, gleefully.

"Don't I! you hold the buttercup to your chin."

She clapped her hands, and laughing said, "How do you know that?"

"Oh! I know more than you think," I answered, coolly; but feeling a young man's pride, nevertheless, in her admiration. "Can you tell me, for instance, what is this?"

I had been, as my habit was, poking with my stick into the turf, and now I had loosened a heavy, rusty looking bit of stone, that rolled at my feet.

"No," she said, with some contempt. "I don't care for dirty rocks; I care for flowers and trees."

"But this dirty bit of rock," I answered, "is a horseshoe-one," quite willing to show off my geological knowledge and forgetting that she would be wholly ignorant of the matter. "If there's a bull of it on yer thigh's farm, it will make his fortune. I shouldn't wonder if there was," I added. "This ore is always found in just such localities, where the trap dykes," and I waved my stick in the direction of the ragged, knife-edged hills that rose in the "broke through the sandstone," "it's as good as a gold mine, my dear."

"A gold mine!" her eyes were bigger than ever now.

"Yes! as good as a gold mine. If the farm was mine, I'd sink shafts at once. Is your uncle at home?"

"No. He has gone to Whitby."

"Well, then, mind you tell him when he comes home to-night. It will do no harm at any rate." As I spoke I rose to go.

She looked down and put her finger to her mouth again. At last, with a sly blush, she said:

"Would you mind writing it down? the name, I mean."

"Oh! the name, of the ore. Certainly, my child, laughing. I have a leaf [illegible] memorandum book as I spoke, and wrote the word as she requested.

"Don't often come this way?" she asked, bashfully, as I offered my hand and said good-bye.

"I was never here before, little one, and don't know that I shall ever come again."

Her face fell.

"But I should like to come," I added. "I will try next summer."

She brightened up again.

"Oh! do come," she cried, "Do you know I like you—ever so much."

When I reached the turn of the wood at the top of the hill above, I stopped to look back. My little acquaintance stood just where I had left her, gazing wistfully after me. I took off my hat, she courtsied, and then I plunged into the forest.

That night, at Whitby, I had occasion for my pencil case, a thin, golden one, with my name engraved on it. I could not find it anywhere. "Where have I left it?" I had quite forgotten that I had used it in the spring house, and might have dropped it there.

I never returned to the old farm-house. The next winter I went abroad, for I had a competent fortune, and I wished to finish a German university. Afterwards I became an attache, and subsequently traveled extensively. At last I began to long for my native land. Ten years in Europe had only made me love the institutions of my country the more. But before I returned to America I went to Rome on a farewell visit. To me, as to many others, that wonderful city was the one city of the world, to which to go back, again and again, with ever increasing affection.

The morning after I arrived, I walked to St. Peter's to hear, in the season's chapel, the music of Palestrina. While listening to the chanting, I happened to glance up at one of the private galleries on the left, and saw there a woman's face, so wraut, so exalted, that for the time she looked like one of Fra [illegible] Angelic.

"It won't do," said my friend, Charley Hargrave, putting his arm into mine, when the congregation was dispersing. "I saw whom you were looking at, but she's above even your reach. She's been the belle of the season, my dear fellow, and has had lots of earls and counts disputing her smiles. Stop here she comes, and Prince Borgia is with her, to whom they say she is engaged."

We had by this time reached the aisle outside. As the lady passed she looked up, as if some instinct had told her she was the subject of our conversation. For one moment our eyes met. A thrill went through me. Never before had I known what love was, but from that moment I was hopelessly lost.

"Who is she," I stammered, when she and her escort had passed out of hearing.

"Miss Vonberg, a great heiress."

"German?"

"No, American, though of German descent, as the name shows. The gossip of the last week, that she had finally made her choice, must be true: for that was Prince Borgia, as I said before; and only some influential person, one of the Pope's guard, as he is, for example, could have got a permit to that gallery. The stately old dame with them, too, was his mother; the other was Miss Vonberg's chaperon, for she is an orphan. You'd have known all this, if you had been here through the winter, as I have been. Why, the young English swells used to crowd the table d'hote at Miss Vonberg's hotel in the Corso, just to catch a sight of her at dinner. At last she had to move to private apartements in the Palazza Goldona, to avoid being stared out of countenance."

Why was it that, notwithstanding this friendly warning, I went back to my hotel to think of Miss Vonberg? Was I mistaken in fancying that, in passing, she had looked at me with evident interest? All that day her image was before me. At night I dreamed of her; dreamed she had made me happy: and awoke to find out my delusion, and to wish I could have slept on forever, with dreams so blissful.

But sleep would not come again. Besides, I have an engagement with an old diplomatic friend to accompany him, his wife, and his wife's mother on a drive out on the Campagna. There had been some remarkable excavations made lately at the Scava, which he wished me to see. So I dressed, breakfasted and joined my friends.

We had finished our investigations, and were about to enter the barouche, when I heard shrieks and the rush of wheels, and glancing up the road, saw a carriage approaching us at full gallop. In vain the coachman tugged at the frightened steeds. On, on they tore, the barouche bounding from side to side behind them, threatening the lives of the two ladies who seemed to be the only occupants of the carriage, and from one of whom came the shrieks.

It was but the work of an instant for me to rush forward, seize the nigh horse, twist the bit until I threw him against his fellow, and stop the carriage with a lunch that snapped the pole and sent the coachman rocketing from his seat. In another instant my friend had come to my aid, the traces had been cut, and all danger was over.

I stepped to the door, hat in hand, to assist the ladies to alight. The one nearest me, an elderly woman, whose shrieks had rent the air, fairly tumbled out into my arms. It took both my friend and myself, she was so helpless, to carry her to the bank by the roadside, where we put her down. Then leaving my companion and the ladies of the party to attend to her, I hurried back to the barouche.

[illegible] I could reach [illegible] lightly o[illegible] the hill-way. Apparently she was an [illegible] from taking [illegible] room at home. As I began to apologize for my delay, she threw back her veil and smiled, revealing the face of Miss Vonberg.

I felt as if I walked on air.

"How can we thank you enough?" she said, in the softest, most musical of voices. "I had given ourselves up for lost when you rushed forward so bravely."

Never shall I forget the emphasis on those last words, or her look as she spoke them.

"It was nothing," I replied, yet my heart beat high and proud. "Nothing more than any other would have done."

"Pardon me," she answered, "I do not think so. It was an even chance that the horses would trample you to death." Her great Juno-like eyes blazed as she uttered these words.

She had stepped in her enthusiasm. But now, as if sensible she had been too frank, she colored violently, and moved quickly forward, saying, "Excuse me, but aunt, I perceive is calling me."

"How shall we ever get back to Rome?" cried the poor old lady who had recovered from her faint. "I never, never can trust myself behind those horses again."

"If you will accept them, the seats of my friend and myself are at your service," I said.

"But you will have to walk back to Rome."

"That is a trifle," I replied.

"The distance must be four or five miles. But for my aunt I could not think of accepting." She hesitated. "I suppose there is no other alternative. How can we ever repay you?" She gave me her hand in parting, smiling bewitchingly.

The long miles back to the Latern gate seemed but a few steps, I was intoxicated with happiness.

Intoxicated with happiness and with dreams that I soon found to be, alas! hopeless ones. For, calling the next day at the Palazza Goldona, the first person I saw in the saloon was Prince Borgia, to whom Miss Vonberg introduced me. He had heard of the event of the day before, and he scowled at me as if I had interfered with him. Miss Vonberg herself was ill at ease. She watched the prince anxiously, so anxiously that I rose to go.

I think I never was so angry. Miss Vonberg was evidently engaged to the prince, and moreover was afraid of him. She was as different, in his presence from the bright, frank, enthusiastic girl of the Campagna, as it was possible to be. "Another mesrifice to rank," I said wrathfully. "What fools our fashionable girls make of themselves!" You see, I had gone there expecting a warm welcome, dreaming impossible dreams, and this was my revenge.

Now came days and weeks of intolerable misery. Angry as I was I could not get rid of Miss Vonberg's image. Her blushing eager face, as she thanked me on the Campagna, was rising up before me constantly; and at every recurrence of that seductive vision I was more madly in love than ever. More than this. Whenever I happened to find her alone, she was graciousness itself, natural, frank, sympathetic, charming beyond words. But if the Prince happened to come, she froze toward me at once. Was she a flirt? Everything contradicted this idea. No, she was pledged to the Prince, and afraid of awakening his jealousy. Yet I loved her in spite of all.

The reader will say it was insanity. Perhaps it was. Perhaps all love at first sight is. Again and again had I laughed at such a passion: had called it boyish; and said it was impossible for a man of sense; yet here I was at eight and twenty, as much a slave to love at first sight as the veriest lad of seventeen! Night and day I thought only of Miss Vonberg. I haunted every place I thought to meet her—the Pinican hill, the Borgese gardens, the Villa Pamphelia, the opera, the Corso. Her sweet, low voice, her enchanting smile, her divine face and figure were always before me.

At last came a crisis. The Prince's originally cold hauteur deepened into almost surly insolence. Once or twice Miss Vonberg, I thought, feared an explosion. I shall never forget the imploring look she gave me at a ball, when the Prince, finding me at her side quite forgot that he was a gentleman. That look was the last drop in my cup of bitterness.

"She is grateful to me for that day on the Campagna," I said to myself, "and has not the heart to refuse me an occasional dance; but she throws herself on my mercy; she begs me by her looks not to incense the Prince. Why do I stay here to complicate matters? I cannot trust myself much longer if the Prince continues to be so rude: there will be an affray and a scandal for her name will be dragged into public gossip. Had I not better leave Rome, and so relieve her from anxiety."

I lay awake all night revolving this sacrifice, and fell asleep in the early morning, having resolved upon it. There was a train at midnight by way Civita Vecchia—I would take that, and put the Atlantic, as soon as might be, between me and my hopeless love.

"One last glimpse," I said, "is all I ask. I cannot even trust myself to a farewell. Mrs. Townsend told me they were going to a concert at the Barberini palace this evening. I am not asked there, but I will go to the Goldona, about the time they will return, and catch, unseen, a look at her as she descends from the carriage."

The Palazza Goldona is one of the smallest of its rank, and has not even a courtyard. It is situated on a side street that runs at right angles with the Corso. Up and down this narrow street I paced between 10 and 11 o'clock that night. Once or twice I fancied that another cloaked figure was engaged on the same errand; as soon as ever before, when watching for a sight in Miss Vonberg's window. I had also fancied I was not alone. At last the rumbling of approaching wheels was heard, and I had just time to conceal myself behind one of the large columns that flanked the portal, when the coach came dashing up. In another moment

Mrs. Townsend, [illegible] by Miss Vonberg, had descended [illegible] the great entrance sweeping [illegible] the elderly lady disappeared [illegible] lowing archway. But [illegible] for a moment down the [illegible] one. Had [illegible] them [illegible] prevented from attempting [illegible]; and did she hope [illegible] at this late hour, he would pay [illegible] visit? As she stood there, [illegible] white shoulders glanced [illegible] an, marble, in the doorway, [illegible] she looked more dazzlingly beautiful.

A jealous pang shot through me. It was only for a moment, however, that she waited. After a hasty glance up and down the street, and an instant of eager listening she turned and entered the portal, the carriage, meantime, driving rapidly away. As she went in I stepped noiselessly forward, my eyes hungry to follow her till she disappeared entirely. I was so absorbed that I did not observe another cloaked figure, which had been concealed on the opposite side of the portal, and which sprang lightly forth after me. All I noticed was that Miss Vonberg suddenly turned, as if detecing footsteps behind her. To escape recognition I darted to one side, threwing the cloak over my face. That sudden movement saved my life. A dagger that would have penetrated my heart, if it had gone where it was intended, struck me on the shoulder-blade and glanced off; but it was driven with such force, that coming unexpectedly, as it did, it prostrated me prone on my face.

A piercing shriek cut the still night air, there was a rush of women's garments, and Miss Vonberg was kneeling beside me, endeavouring to lift me up.

"He is murdered," she cried; and never shall I forget the agony of that voice. "The Prince has done it." Then in a whisper, as her arms clasped me frantically, "Oh, my love——"

Could I believe my ears? Was it true that she called by that endearing epithet? For a moment I remained passive in the dear arms that encircled me, till hearing the footstep of the porter and Mrs. Townsend, I was compelled to rise.

"I am not hurt, darling," I said, "I was only stunned for a moment——

"Thank God," she cried, with a long eager look. Then she started back, the color deluging her face, her hands went up to hide it, and she burst into tears.

My arms were around her immediately, in spite of the spectators. "She knew me—you return my love—what happiness," I cried.

She looked up at me timidly.

"Yes, I knew you," she replied softly "I have seen you watching my window some nights. I wanted to warn you against the Prince, but I never had a chance. I knew your life was in danger—" and she broke down again.

The next morning found me an early visitor at the Palazza Goldona, for, as the reader may suppose, I did not leave Rome by the midnight train.

My mistress met me, all smiles and blushes.

"In love with Prince Borgia," she cried, indignantly, when I had confessed my jealousy. "Marry the Prince. I am too thoroughly an American ever to have married any foreigner, least of all Prince Borgia. For weeks I have done everything, short of rudeness, to get rid of him. His mother, before he came to Rome, was very kind to me, and I could not, for her sake, treat him as I otherwise should. Ever since that day on the Campagna, or rather the day after, when I saw his manner toward you, I have dreaded some such attempt as this, for I know his jealous, vindictive nature."

"It was just that anxiety I misinterpreted," I said. "It made me sure that you loved him. I thought it was for him you were anxious."

She laughed lightly.

"You ought to have a better opinion of yourself. I declare," she added suddenly, starting from my side, "I do believe it was I that proposed, after all. Fie on you, 'faint heart never won fair lady,' sir."

But I drew her again to me, and kissed her, and she nestled on my bosom blushing and happy, and forgiving me. At last she glanced up shyly.

"But I have a confession to make," said she. "You won't be angry?"

"Certainly not. How could I?"

"Promise."

"I promise."

"It is something you ought to know before I become

PETERBOROUGH, MAY 23RD, 1872.

Editorial Items.

The Bankrupt Act has been repealed during the present Session of Parliament at Ottawa.

The Bill to grant the Government the entire control of the Pacific Railway, was carried through a second reading on Tuesday night, by a vote of 39 to 82.—This is another instance of the readiness with which the Conservative Members vote away the safeguards of the people's. They thus place $50,000,000 acres of land and $30,000,000 at the will of a corrupt Ministry. How long will the people suffer these things to go on?

The Mail, it is said, is about to issue 50,000 copies of their paper containing Sir John A's. speech on the Washington Treaty. Not to be behind hand, the Globe should issue 100,000 copies of their edition containing the Hon. Mr. Blake's crushing reply thereto, We know which would be more eagerly sought after in Ontario Reformer.

The Lady's Friend for June.—The June number leads off with a charming picture of the heroine of the day, Dolly Varden. Here she is, in all her glory of youth and beauty. On the opposite page a picturesque scene in Switzerland greets us. The Music is—"Some one to weep when I am gone." There is a profusion of stylish toilettes and fashionable hats and caps; and a pretty little sketch of Sunnyside, the romantic home of Washington Irving. Mrs. Henry Wood's novel "Within the Maze," grows more absorbingly interesting in every number. There are also excellent stories by Dasy Ventnor and Anne L. Forcelle, and Miss Douglas begins one of her attractive serials, "An Every-day Heroine." The Fashion and Housekeeping Departments appear to be thoroughly attended to. Price $2 a year. Four copies $6. Eight copies (and one gratis) $12. The Lady's Friend and the Saturday Evening Post $4. Published by Deacon & Petersen, Philadelphia. Single copies for sale by all News Dealers and by the Publishers, price 20 cents.

Peterboro Boating Club.—This Club met at Calnan's Hotel on Friday evening last, when the following Officers were elected:—Mr. H. Calcutt, President; Mr. M. Dunsford, Vice President; Mr. J. O'Donnell, Secretary; Mr. A. H. Colville, Treasurer; and Messrs. Toker, H. T. Strickland, D. McDougall, C. J. Blomfield, W. J. Nesbitt, S. R. Price and F. J. Tate, Committee. A Committee was appointed to draft By-laws &c., to meet at 4 P. M., 27th inst. The President, with Messrs, Tate, Blomfield and Toker, were appointed to arrange about a Club Boat House. A resolution was passed to petition the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, asking him to prevent the Mill Owners from throwing saw dust and other refuse from their mills into the Otonabee River and other waters, and that he report the petition of the Mill Owners. The meeting then adjourned till Monday eve'g at 8 o'clock, at Turver's Hotel.

Be Ready.—We advise Reformers to be ready for the approaching elections. The Ottawa Government will, no doubt, follow the example of John Sandfield McDonald, and spring the elections on the province. They have their men ready. Are reformers ready? If not, let no time be lost. We do not say that our Candidates should yet be announced but they should be secured, so that when a convention is called, which will soon be done, delegates may be able to select the man most likely to be successful, and who has the confidence of Reformers.

Sir John A. MaDonald attempted to buy up the Toronto Telegraph, and failing in that, started the Mail. Since bartering away the rights and interests of Canada by the Treaty, for the guarantee of a paltry $2,500,000, he imagines all Canadians venal, and hence his attempt to purchase the Telegraph. Few Conservative journalists would have been able to withstand the looks of the legal tenders; as long used to government pap they begin to look upon the "Tenders" as Conservative property.

Mr. Miller paid over $26,700,00 for wheat delivered at Keene, during the past winter.

Wheat speculators who have been lucky enough to hold on, will make something this year. It is now realizing $1.60 to $1.64, bought at an average of perhaps $1.22 to $1.32

The County Counsel did not pass the By Law submitted by the northern Reeves, last week. The whole thing was illegal not being drawn up in accordance with the petition from the ratepayers.

The amount of building operations this year in this town promises to surpass that of any previous year. We see extensive preparations being made in every part of the Town, and that for first class buildings both for stores and dwellings. Peterboro only requires a little enterprise to ensure marked progress.

The Treaty.

The public will not be taken by surprise to learn that the Treaty of Washington has been ratified in the Dominion Parliament, at Ottawa.

The present House has shown itself subservient to John A. McDonald & Cartier, so continuously, that any disaffection at the last moment was too much to expect. The class of men sent to the Dominion Parliament in too many instances, are the mere puppets of the Ministry, and are prepared to vote, blindly, any measure affecting their masters. It matters little to the Representatives of this country that Canadians are forced by the truckling, jobbing Ministry to barter their birth-rights for even less than Esau's portion. He sold his birth-right to satisfy the demands of nature, but John A. McDonald sold Canadian rights and interests for a filthy two-pence-half-penny consideration that Canada did not require, and never sought, except through a Ministry, that really has not the confidence of the people, although they succeeded in securing a majority in the House.

It has long been a reproach to British statesmen that in every treaty made with the United States the latter has been too acute for them, and by their shrewdness have managed to secure large portions of Canadian Territory to the detriment of the Province and the annoyance of the people. They have been no less successful in their last treaty arrangements. An immense fishing territory has been given up to the Americans—because, John A. says, "they had set their hearts on it and must have it, of course." So says this Canadian Statesman, and Messrs. Perry and Grover smile assent, and vote away those valuable fishing grounds the annual value of which is not far from Three Millions of Dollars.

The St. Lawrence and the vast advantages, in a commercial way it offered to Canadians over. American outlets of trade were the boast of Canadians since the establishment of trade in the Colony. No one ever doubted that it was not entirely a Canadian river—not even Americans—until Sir John A. McDonald cast doubts upon it during the late debate in the House at Ottawa, and in that House there were minions enough to vote away our noble river to satisfy the hearts of American Statesmen, and to satisfy American lust for territory; and among those who voted equal rights to our noble stream to rapacious Americans, were Messrs. Grover and Perry. It would appear that if so so required they would have voted to be annexed altogether: but to some of them that would not be much, as a speech once delivered in the Peterborough Town Hall showed his leanings.

But a day of reckoning will soon come. It is said that the Elections will in all likelyhood, come off in July. Now we ask the Electors of these Ridings to remember the men who thus voted away their territory and rights, and elect them to stay at home in the future.

Mr. Perry will not be a candidate it is understood, as an office awaits him as the reward of his subserviency, but we are told Mr. Grover intends appealing to the East Riding again. Are the electors of the East Riding prepared to accept him again? surely not. Has he not proved himself the willing tool of John A. and Lower Canada? Has he not sold his Country for the paltry consideration of getting Great Britain to merely endorse an note, for a few years, for a trifling sum of money? Has he not lowered Canadians in the eyes of American and even British Statesmen by consenting to a Treaty that is wrong in Principle and unjust to us, and that for the most trifling consideration? Thus representing them as ready to sell their Country for a few shillings.

We Trust these things will be remembered by the Electors at the approaching contest and that they will select a man in whom they can have confidence, a Canadian in the true sense of the word, who will guard Canadian interest! support men who will not sacrifice our country, sell our territory, and tarnish our honor, and destroy our self respect for any consideration short of life, and not even for that, when our cause is just.

Not a Word of Truth in it.

Our contemporary, the Review, of the 10th instant, after quoting from a "protest" of a few catholics, who oppose the "Catholic League," being the paid agents of the Dominion Government, and hence are paid to abuse Mr. John O'Donohoe, and all who oppose John A. says:—"After that will our clear Grit friends still maintain that Mr Fairbairn's withdrawal as a candidate in East Peterboro', and the appearance of Mr. O'Donohoe upon the scene, was not the result of Mr. George Brown's instructions."

The Review's "Grit friends" doubtless maintain that George Brown gave no instructions whatever, directly, or indirectly with regard to selecting Mr. O'Donohoe as a candidate for East Peterboro. When telegraphed to in regard to Mr. O'Donohoe's political antecedents, Mr. Brown continually answered the telegrams and nothing more, either by letter or telegram.

Mr. Fairbairn never was a candidate for the East Riding, and consequently never withdrew from it. The imminence of the Riding, the manner in which the Elections were sprung on the people, not affording time to canvass the Riding, and the state of his own health at the time, were strong motives against his being a candidate. But independent of these obstacles, he placed himself at the will of the convention, which unanimously selected him for the West Riding, and the sequel shows the wisdom of the selection.

Mr. O'Donohoe was first named in the convention, and by a member of it, who had never received a word of instruction on any subject whatever from George Brown. Mr. O'Donohoe was selected because a he was a reliable Reformer and considered an eligible candidate. While canvassing the Riding he showed himself a gentleman in the truest sense of that word, honorable, truthful, and courteous, well versed in public matters, and if he had been elected, would no doubt have proved himself a wise and honorable representation.

During his short visit to Peterboro, he made a host of friends for himself in both Ridings.

Are these denials explicit enough to stop the "George Brown" cry of the Tories?

Will Catholic electors bear in mind that in the minds of Conservatives it is still a mortal sin that Mr. John O'Donohoe was brought in this county at the last election for they have harped on this string up to the 10th instant. But if a sin, it is one for which George Brown will never have to answer.

Don't Holla too Loudly.

The Conservative press is very noisy over the idea that out of the representatives of Ontario, there was a majority mercenary enough to sell their Country and support John A. MaDonald.

The present state of things is no criterion whereby to judge of the future Ontario will soon give a good account of herself. Before the last elections for Ontario, the ex-member for the West Riding boasted of securing 200 of a majority. Did he secure them? His imaginary majority turned into a minority, and he was left at home.

John Sandfield counted on ruling Ontario four years longer by means of the prudent outlay of the Railway Subsidy, but he was mistaken. The Province was tired of him and gave an overwhelming verdict against him.

Ontario is waiting for an opportunity to rid itself of the trammels of a corrupt Combination at Ottawa, and the approaching elections will show as far as Ontario is concerned, that they don't want Cartier to rule over them.

The Grand Junction.

The Belleville Intelligencer of Saturday last says:—

"In order to allay any uneasiness that may exist in the public mind respecting the construction of the Grand Junction Railway, we may state that the senior partner of the contractors, Mr. Brooks, who is now in the South, is expected to be here about the 24th of May, that Mr. Eyan, one of the partners, will be here next week to arrange for the vigorous prosecution of the works, and that the Assistant Engineer under the contractors arrived here last night. The contracting firm stand amongst the first of Railway Contractors in Canada, their agreement with the Company is under seal, and they are thoroughly reliable, honorable and responsible men, and the public may rest assured that the work will be commenced at an early date, and pushed forward to completion without delay.

More Injustice.

An attempt to increase the representation of those Cities and Counties that are likely to return Ministerialists, it is believed will be made during the present Parliament. Sir F. Hincks wishes to represent a city, and hence Ottawa with not 22,000 inhabitants is to have two representatives; Hamilton, with 26,000 two; and Toronto three. This, it is supposed, would secure two more supporters with a chance of only one Oppositionist. This is the way John A. hopes to retain power for himself and colleagues.

They feel their waning influence and are ready to do anything to secure themselves against just retribution.

The country need not expect justice from them. Several counties in this province have the requisite population. viz., 18,000, to entitle them to additional members, but John A. fears the verdict of the honest yeomen of Ontario, and is preparing to transfer their privileges to certain cities, where electors are believed to be more easily managed. How long will Ontario be at the mercy of such men?

Annual Meeting of the South Monaghan Branch Bible Society.

The Annual Meeting of the South Monaghan Branch Bible Society was held on the evening of Monday, May 13th at 8 o'clock, in the Wesleyan Church.

The meeting was then called to order by electing the Rev. Wm. Mitchell to take the chair.

After singing the first Hymn of the Wesleyan Hymn Book, the chairman read the 3rd chapter of II Peter, and called upon the Rev. F. Coleman to engage in prayer.

After a few preliminary remarks from the chairman, stating the object of the meeting, he called upon the Secretary to read the report, which showed a balance in favor of the Society of $16.21, after giving a free donation of $42.00 to the Upper Canada, and $42.00 to the Montreal Auxillary Bible Society.

The names of the officers and members of Committee which had been previously nominated were read and confirmed by the meeting.

The chairman then called upon the Agent to address the meeting which he did by giving a lecture on the Bible and the World.

The Rev. F. Coleman was then called and addressed the meeting for a short time on Romanism in our midst.

A collection was taken up.

A vote of thanks was tendered to the Lady collectors who had worked so faithfully in the cause.

The Benediction was then pronounced by the Agent of the Society.—Com.

COUNTY COUNCIL.

Special Session.

Peterborough, May 15th, 1872.

The Minutes of the last day of the previous session having been read and confirmed, the Warden then read his ADDRESS.

To the Municipal Council of the County of Peterborough:

Gentlemen—In accordance with an Act passed by the Ontario Parliament at its last sittings, to amend an Act entitled "An Act to incorporate the Fenelon Falls Railway Company," I have received a petition from the necessary number of duly qualified voters of the Townships of Galway, Snowdon, Minden, Dysart, Stanhope and Monmouth, requesting me to call a special meeting of this Council forthwith, to pass a By-law to grant aid to the above Railway Company to the extent of $55,000, through two readings, and submit it to the ratepayers of said Townships. I have, therefore, deemed it expedient to call you together at once, so that should the By-law be approved by the said ratepayers, the third reading might take place at the June session, thus avoiding the expense and inconvenience of one special meeting. The petition and other papers relating to the same will be laid before you.

The Iron Bridge over the Otonabee river, I am glad to say, has been completed, and I trust will give satisfaction, and I hope will prove to be an admirable and substantial structure. A detailed account of the expenses incurred will be laid before you.

I am glad to state that the Mud Lake and Pigeon Creek Bridges have sustained no material damage by the ice this year. I am also glad to state that the Beckhorn Bridge has been completed, and the approaches thereto have been filled up with slabs and will be gravelled in a short time. Great credit is due to the contractor for having constructed the Bridge in mid winter, when the ice made a good substituted for the travel of the public.

The following papers and documents have been received since January, and herewith submitted for your consideration:—

1st Letters from the Assistant Provincial Secretary, acknowledging the receipt of the Petitions of this Council. Firstly, a Memorial praying the assent of the Lieut.-Governor to the passage of an Act to amend the Act 34 Vic., Cap. 48. Secondly, a Memorial praying that the Beckhorn Road through Harvey be completed. I have learned, not officially, that on a personal application having been made by the Sheriff and Mr. MaDonald, Reeve of Dysart, the Government promised that this work should be proceeded with during the ensuing summer.

2nd Notification from Mr. J. H. Longmuir, Inspector of Asylums, Prisons, &c., that the Institution for the education of the Blind would be opened on the 16th of April last, with statement of the conditions on which pupils are admitted.

3rd Copy of a Memorial from the Council of the Counties of Lennox and Addington.

4th Report of Mr. Bird, County Engineer, in relation to the Lock's Bridge. It is necessary that you give full directions as to what is to be done in connection with this matter.

5th Application from Merchmont Home and the Kingston General Hospital.

6th Communication from Mr. Hamilton of Yorkville, claiming to be paid the value of a lot of land in Belmont, owned by him, and erroneously sold for taxes in 1862.

7th Notification from the Clerk of the County of Victoria, that the Council of that County had granted the sum of $80 to improve the western boundary of the Township of Smith, provided this Council granted a like sum.

On making enquiry, I learn that the sum paid by our Treasurer to the Registrar of the County for work done exclusively for the town, under 29 Vic., Cap. 24, Sec. 26 and 33, and for books exclusively for the town, will together amount to something like $900, and as there is no provision made in the Statutes by which this sum can be recovered, I would suggest that the Provincial Government be memorialized, praying that the law may be so amended as to enable Corporations situated as we are, to recover the amount so paid.

You are all, no doubt, aware that we were defeated in one attempt to obtain a Special Act to repeal the Act of Parliament, legalizing our proposed By-law to aid the construction of the Grand Junction and Haliburton Railways. It will be necessary for you to decide what is to be done in this matter.

The Maple Leaf Cricket Club of the town of Peterboro', have requested you to grant them the use of the Court House Green for playing cricket on. The request will be laid before you.

JOHN WALTON,
Warden.

Peterboro', May 15, 1872.

On motion of Mr. Peck, the Warden's Address was referred to the following committees; Messrs. Miller, Coughlin, Moher, Burgess, Parker and Peck.

Mr. S. S. Peck, seconded by Mr. McDonald, introduced a By-law to grant aid to the extent of $40,000 from a portion of the County to the Lindsay, Fenelon Falls and Ottawa Railway Company. In doing so Mr. Peck explained that two years ago a charter had been obtained for a branch line of Railway from the Nipissing to Lindsay and Fenelon Falls, and that at the last session of the Legislature the charter had been amended so as to permit the company to commence their line at Uxbridge, and proceed thence to Lindsay Fenelon Falls, and the Ottawa River, obsetving this, the people in the North feeling that the Peterboro' and Haliburton scheme had been practically abandoned when Mr. Fowler obtained control of the charter, turned their attentention in the direction of Toronto and opened negotiations with the Toronto and Lindsay people. When the petition was sent to

SECOND DAY.

The Council met. All the members present.

The minutes of yesterday were read and confirmed.

On motion of Mr. Millar, seconded by Mr. Blezard, the Committee to which was referred the Warden's Address, reported recommending that no business be taken up except that for which they were specially called together; the Hamilton land matter, and the Lock's Bridge. And that with regard to the two latter matters, that the Warden and advisory Committee be authorized to take advice as to the legality of Mr. Hamilton's claim, and to pay the same if so advised; and that the Lock's Bridge should be left in the hands of the hands of the Advisory Committee.

On motion of Mr. Choate, seconded by Mr. Peck—The report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. Choate, seconded by Mr. Blezard—The committee to which was referred the Petition from the Ratepayers of the Municipalities of Galway, Snowdon, Minden, Dysart and Stanhope, praying to have a By-law submitted to the said Municipalities granting aid to the amount of $55,000 to the Lindsay, Fenelon Falls and Ottawa River Railway reported.

Mr. Choate, from the committee on the Railway By-law, reported that they had obtained the opinion of Mr. Scott to the effect that it would be illegal for the Council to submit a By-law for $40,000, when the petitioners asked for a By-law for $55,000, and they, consequently, could not recommend that the By-law should be passed to a second reading and submit it to the ratepayers.

The Report was adopted.

Mr. S. S. Peck said he thought it was the duty of the Council to give the Warden some instructions as to what course he should persue with regard to the bonus to the Grand Junction Railway, as he believed the Warden would be soon be called upon to hand over the Debentures.

Mr. Coughlan moved, seconded by Mr. Blezard—That the Council do now adjourn until June.

Moved in amendment by Mr. Sanderson, seconded by Mr. Collins, that this Council do adjourn until 2 o'clock this afternoon, and that Mr. Fairbairn, M. P. P., be solicited to address this Council, and that the committee on Printing be allowed to report.

The amendment was carried, and the Council adjourned until two o'clock.

The Council met at two o'clock.

On motion of Mr. Sanderson, seconded by Mr. Collins—Mr. Fairbairn addressed the Council upon the Grand Junction Railway By-law and matters connected with the Grand Junction Railway.

On motion of Mr. Choate, seconded by Mr. Millar—P. Pearce, Esq. addressed the Council. He considered the By-law defective in itself, especially the 7th clause that binds the Company to open their road from the eastern boundary of the County and also to cross the Trent at Hastings, which he considered would make the route a crooked one. He also thought the Company had not yet complied with the terms of the By-law or of the statutes, in commencing the Road.

Mr. Coughlan thought that the Company had commenced the road in good faith, and good time, and stated that men were now at work on the road. He believed too that no debentures would be asked by the Company until the terms of the By-law were complied with and the road built.

Moved by Mr. S. S. Peck, seconded by Mr. Millar—That T. M. Fairbairn, Esq., M.P.P. and the Warden be and are hereby requested to obtain from R. A. Harrison, Esq., his opinion as to the position of this County in regard to the Grand Junction and Peterboro, and Haliburton Railway By-law. Carried.

On motion of Mr. Blezard, seconded by Mr. Choate—The Committee on Printing reported, and on motion of Mr. Choate, seconded by Mr. Blezard—The Report was adopted.

Moved by Mr. Choate, seconded by Mr J. P. Brown—That this Council is pleased to learn of the probability of the early construction of the Quebec and Ontario Railway from the city of Ottawa to the city of Toronto via the town of Peterboro, and that should the road be constructed from the eastern limit of this county to the town of Peterboro, this Council will be prepared to render liberal assistance by way of bonus or otherwise. Lost.

Yeas—Messrs. MaDonald, Moher, Molloney, F. Peck, Calnan, Brown, S & Peck, Choate, Coughlan—9.

Nays—Messrs. Irwin, Brown, A. McCarthy, Parker, Burgess, Collins, Sanderson, Blezard, Miller, Walton—10.

Moved by Mr. Choate, seconded by Mr. J. P. Brown—That a committee consisting of Messrs. S S Peck, J P Brown, McDonald, Moher, and the mover be appointed to consider the various Railway Schemes, before the County and report at the June Session. Carried.

The Council adjourned.

The Concert.—Mr. Galletly's concert on Tuesday night was well attended, and the audience was highly pleased with the way in which all the singers acquitted themselves. Miss Gerrie, who had not before sung in Guelph for a long time, was greeted with hearty applause. We notice a very decided improvement in her singing, greator power of expression, more command of the voice, and altogether a finish and grace which are very pleasing and impressive. All the pieces set down for her were admirably sung and encored, but to our mind she was most successful in "Gloomy winter's noo awa'," which she sang with much tenderness and feeling. "Sweet Home" by Miss Gerrie and her sister was also feelingly rendered. The duets "The Echo," and "Huntingtower," by Miss Gerrie and Mr. Gallerly were given with fine effect. The echo parts in the first one were somewhat marred by the noise of parties coming in. The last one was sung in a style we have seldom heard equalled, and the applause which followed was hearty and enthusiastic. Mr. Gallerly was very successful in his rendering of the Scotch songs such as "Jenny's Bawbee" and "The Laird o' Cockpen." He throws considerable humour into these well known airs, and sings them with a spirit and appreciation which no audience can resist. In "Nil Desperandum" he had more scope for his well cultivated and excellent voice, and his rendering of this fine piece was deservedly applauded. Prof. Jones fully sustained the high character he bears as a vocalist. He has a powerful yet sweet and sympathic voice, and throws much feeling into the music. His rendering of "The Rescue" and "Maple Leaf" was very fine, but the "Grave of Bonaparte" was his masterpiece. It must be hard to be appreciated. Mr. Gallerly's little daughter did very well, though she had a severe cold. The concert altogether was the best sustained and the richest in point of talent we have had in Guelph for a long time. We feel sorry Miss Gerrie has decided not to sing again in public, for she is one of the best amateurs in this section, and was always welcomed on the platform We can promise Mr. Gallerly and Prof. Jones a cordial reception and a full house if they should visit Guelph again, as we hope they will do before long.—Guelph Mercury.

Chicago Dock Loafers.—The Chicago Post says, the docks of Chicago are infested by gangs of the most degraded, dissolute and beastly specimens of loafers and roughs. These ruffians having lost the little self respect they may have had at one time, have abandoned themselves to excess of vagabondism, outlawry, and other recklessness. When actually necessary to keep soul and body together, they do a few hours' work, receive their pay, and expend the greater part of the money in the purchase of the poison which serves as their bread and meat, and which would kill any decent human being. With a load of liquid and a bottle of whisky, the last one of which is generally stolen (the dock loafer considers it a great sin to buy a bottle), they congregate under old wharves, and out of the way places, and there they drink and fight and carouse, and sometimes they die. Many of these wretches would not be missed if they were found some morning with their throats cut, and would not be more completely forgotten if they were found in the river. Scarcely a week passes that a bottle that had been recently emptied, and perhaps a little of the liquid remains in it, is not found in the dock, and the discovery of a dead body is not unfrequent. Of course, all this is very bad for the dock loafers themselves, but it is worse for the community at large, which is compelled to support them in idleness, and to protect itself against their depredations. The only way to get rid of them is to compel them to work, and the only way to compel them to work is to arrest them as vagrants, and put them in the House of Correction, where they will be obliged to labor for their board.

THE DEPATE

An inquiry of a novel and interesting kind took place in reference to this estate last Friday. It appears that Sutherland, an old soldier, who being honorable discharged many years since, settled in Toronto as a pensioner. He was for a time employed as a keeper in the Lunatic Asylum, which he left on account of failing health in 1856. He had before that period married an industrious and excellent woman, and from their joint labours and his small pension managed to save enough to purchase a lot in Queen street, which had increased in value, and on which was erected, mainly from the wife's savings, two small houses.

It was understood apparently between the pair, that the survivor should possess and enjoy all the propriety so obtained, but Mr Sutherland was carried off by death last September, when it was found that he neglected to make a will. The widow has consequently at law, but dower for her life in the use and profits of one third of the premises, however clearly she was in equity entitledto them all.

It was also discovered that the old soldier had died without heirs of any kind, the only child of the marriage having died in infancy, and he, having been an illegitimate son, had no other heirs. Consequently, the Crown was entitled to the lands, subject to the widow's dower and such equitable consideration as she was under the circumstance entitled to. Mrs. Sutherland petitioned the Government accordingly, and a commission was issued directing Messrs. McKenzie and O'Donohoe to call a jury and make the usual inquiring as in case of lands escheated. The Sheriff accordingly called a jury in the Grand Jury room on last Friday. Mr. James Severs being foreman. Mr. J. G. Scott appeared for the Attorney-General, and Messrs. James Beaty, jr., and J. C. Hamilton for the relator Mrs Sutherland. Among the witnesses were Messrs. Donald, Sutherland and George Oal, who had served with Adam Sutherland in the 93rd regiment, Sergeant Jones of the Toronto Pension Office, a fine looking old veteran, Mr. James McKirdy, burnat of the Asylum, and others.

The jury found the case made for the Crown, also that Mrs. Sutherland had contributed largely to the purchase and improvement of the premises and were unanimous in favor of her request for a conveyance being granted. The commissioners and jury then proceeded in cabs and took formal possession of the premises in the name of Her Majesty, immediately, however, relinquishing them to the widow subject to the will of the Governor in Council. It is understood that Mrs. Sutherland's claims will be recognised and a release made to her of the interest which has so unexpectedly fallen to the Crown.

Important Appointment.—It is rumored that a tailor has been added to the staff of the Mail, whose sole duty is to manufacture Tory gentlemen. He is also to write the critical articles on the personal appearance of Mr. Mackenzie, and will keep constantly on hand, pomatum, oils, perfumes and fine-tooth combs for the use of the faithful. No one hereafter is to be admitted into the Tory party without having first passed an examination before this distinguished artiste, and proved himself incapable of eating peas with a soup ladle, or taking soup with a two-pronged fork. Any man found attempting to enter the Mail office without having on kid gloves, patent-leather boots, imitation gold studs, and a gold-washed brass finger ring, will be denounced in the next issue of that journal as a Grit, a satyr, a ruffian and a cut-throat. For particulars see small bills.—Hamilton Times.

Shocking Marine Disaster.

(By Telegraph to the Globe.)

The Harbour Grace papers contain details of a fearful disaster which has occurred at Labrador. On the 11th of March, the brig "Huntsman," commanded by Capt. Robt. Dawe, sailed from Harbour Grace with a crew of 62 men, on a sealing voyage. When off Cape Charlo, Labrador, on Sunday, April 30, in company with the "Rescue," "Vesta" and "Lord Clyde," and near Bottle Harbour, the "Huntsman" having forged ahead, a gale from the northeast sprung up suddenly at nine o'clock in the evening, and she was driven upon the rocks. Before she struck, three seamen saw the rocks and jumped overboard to try and save themselves, but were killed instantly by the rush of floating ice. The remaining 59 took to the rigging, but in five minutes both masts bent over six feet from the deck, and only 17 escaped drowning. Of these, all but three were more or less injured by having arms and legs broken and bodies bruised. They managed to reach the "Rescue" by crawling over the ice, a distance of nearly half a mile. Forty-five men were lost, most of them leaving families at or near Harbour Grace. The other vessels escaped with little damage.

A Table of Daily Savings at Compound Interest.

Cents a Day.	Per Year.	In Ten Years.	Fifty Years
2½	$10. 00	$120	$2,500
5	20. 00	250	5,000
11	40. 00	550	11,000
37½	150. 00	1,200	30,000
55	200. 00	1,600	80,000
$1.10	400. 00	5,500	110,000
1.37	500. 00	6,500	145,000

By the above table it appears that if a mechanic, or clerk, saves only 2½ cents per day, from the time he is 21 until he is three score and ten, the aggregate with interest, will amount to $2,500; and a daily saving of 37½ cents reaches the important sum of $30,000. A dispense sacrificing will provide a fund of nearly fifty thousand dollars to purchase a good farm. There are few employees who cannot save daily, by abstaining from the use of cigars, tobacco, liquor, etc., twice, or ten times the amount of the six cent piece. Every person should provide for old age, and the man in business who can lay by a dollar a day will eventually find himself possessed of over $100,000.

PHILLIPS'S "PIE."—In early life the late Mr. B. Harris, of Leicester, was employed upon the Leicester Herald, then conducted by Mr. (afterward Sir) B. Phillips. It was at this date that an amusing incident occurred, which is thus related by one of the local journals:—On the eve of publication an accident happened in the Herald Office, it was no other than the "squabbling," or turning into "pie" or entire confusion, of the whole mass of letters constituting a column of that paper Young Harris was the unlucky author of this catastrophe. What was to be done? This paper must be got ready for the post or murmurs of discontent would come from subscribers from every quarter far and near. A happy thought flashed across the ingenious Phillips. He instructed the printer to make up a column of standing "pie" jumbled together in most admirable disorder, as every letter was, and at the head of the perplexing conglomeration, he penned a notice to this effect—that just as the Herald was going to press, an express from Holland had been received, which being in the original Dutch, the editor had no time to translate, but he presented an English version in the ensuing week's paper. It is needless to say that the translation never appeared, although, many years after the event, one of the Herald subscribers, living in Derbyshire, who had preserved the paper containing the Dutch express (and spent all his spare cash in vain over Dutch lexicons) gravely requested Sir R. Phillips to favor him with the promised translation.

The Savannah News has the following: "On the afternoon of April 20th, as Mr. William Kelly an old citizen of Bradford County, Florida, was returning home from Starke, he espied an alligator basking in the sand by the roadside. He dismounted, and, taking a hatchet from his cart, approached the reptile for a fight. In the twinkling of an eye his feet were reached from under him, and his leg caught in the monster's mouth. Being an old man, the fight would have gone against him, had not a colored man by the name of George Reff, who happened traffic passing along, dispatched the alligator with a pistol. Mr. Kelly's leg was considerably lacerated, so much so that it is probable he will never again attempt to chop a saurian with his little hatchet.

ALBERT THOMAS.—Mr. Bonner gave his young stallion Startle, a trial on Prospect Park yesterday afternoon, when he trotted a mile in the remarkable time of 2:19½. This is the fastest time ever made by any stallion of any age, and yet Startle is not yet five years old. He will be five on the 14th inst., Mr. Bonner selected Commodore Dodge, Robert Fletcher, and the veteran horse-man Simeon Hoagland, to act as judges. They gave out the time as follows:—First quarter, 34½ seconds; half mile, 1:9; three-quarters, 1. 43½; and the full mile in 2:19½. Mr. Hoagland remarked that Startle is the most wonderful trotter the world has ever seen. Startle is a brother in blood to the renowned Dexter.

The Potato Bug.—The potato bug agitation is already commencing. The Waterloo Chronicle says:—"From various sources we learn that the potato bug is likely to be troublesome during the coming summer. A gentleman near Berlinville informed us that in digging up his potato patch of last year, he turned up a large number of the bugs, some in propria personas and others in the chrysalis form. The Stratford Beacon says that a gentleman there also turned up a number, and, being curious to know whether they had life placed them on a shingle in the sun, when they quickly gave signs of vitality."

THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT.—The claimant to the Tichborne Baronetcy and estates was liberated from Newgate on April 26th on bail; Lord Rivers, Mr. Guildford Ogelow, M. P., Dr. Attwood and Mr. James Lamont entering sureties of £1,250 each for the appearance of the claimant to take his trials on charges of perjury and forgery. The claimant, having given his own recognizances in the sum of £5,000, left jail in a carriage and pair amid a demonstration from a crowd who had gathered outside the prison. He has been an inmate of Newgate prison since March 6th.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL

Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six of some of the best. Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Then in the preparation, of this Oil a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Whosoever applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the small of Oils which they may contain.

Wife to Husband—(Rubbing the PAIN-KILLER on his rheumatic shoulder briskley.) It's a great pity such a good medicine as Perry Davis' PAIN-KILLER is not more extensively used, just see what a world of good it has done even since we have had it. George don't have the toothaches any more, it has saved Fredy a severe attack of Dyspepsia, and I know it will relieve you of Rheumatism.

Husband:—You are right Mary, the PAIN-KILLER seems to fire up the cold corners of my shoulder and put new life into it, is certainly does act instantaneously. I do think my dear, I am cured already (meditatingly) well, well, all I have heard said of it is true, my shoulder is free from pain the first time for these two months.

Wife:—It is strange, we never have been induced to try it before, I should have thought you would have been often advised to try it.

Husband:—I have had the PAIN-KILLER recommended many times, but between the Doctors and Druggists they have always succeeded in keeping me from using it by suggesting other trash that has done me no good.

Wife:—People seem to enjoy paying the Doctor five or ten Dollars every now and then to experiment on them, when a twenty five cent bottle of PAIN-KILLER would give them far more relief, and the Druggists are so obliging it is very hard to say "I want Perry Davis' PAIN-KILLER and nothing else will do," and thus refuse to buy their trash.

Sold every where, price 25 cts. and 50 cts. per bottle.

THERE IS NO DISEASED CONDITION OF THE BODY, in which DR. WHEELER'S Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya may not be used with positive benefit. Being a Chemical Food and Nutritive Tonic, it acts physiologically in the same manner as our diet. It perfects digestion, assimilation, and the formation of healthy blood. It sustains the vital forces by supplying the waste constantly going on, of nerve and muscle, as the result of mental and physical exertion, enabling mind and body to undergo great labor without fatigue. Its action in building up constitutions broken down with Wasting Chronic Diseases, by fast living and bad habits, is truly extraordinary, its effect being immediate in energizing all the organs of the body. Phosphates being absolutely essential to cell formation and the growth of tissues, must for all time be Nature's great restorative and vitalizer.

Sold by all Druggists, at $1. 12-ly.

The partnership heretofore existing between the undersigned, as Carriage and Waggon Makers, in Allandale, has this day been dissolved by mutual consent.

Select Poetry.

Farmer's Daughter.

Up in the early morning,
Just at the peep of day,
Straining the milk in the dairy,
Turning the cows away—
Sweeping the floor in the kitchen,
Making the beds up stairs,
Washing the breakfast dishes,
Dusting the parlor chairs,

Brushing the crumbs from the pantry,
Hunting for eggs in the barn,
Reeling the meat for dinner,
Raining the stocking yarn,
Spreading the snow-white linen
Down on the bushes below,
Ransacking every meadow
Where the red strawberries grow.

Starching the cottons for Sunday,
Churning the country cream,
Raising the pasie and strainer
Down in the running stream,
Feeding the geese and poultry,
Making the puddings and pies,
Jogging the little one's cradle,
Driving away the flies.

Grace in every motion,
Music in every tone,
Beauty of form and feature
Thousands might covet to own—
Cheeks that rival the roses,
Teeth the whitest of pearls;
One of these country maidens is worth
A score of your giddy girls.

Agricultural.

Is Farming Profitable?

A correspondent in the Vermont Watchman gives the following experience of farming:

While young men are being advised to stick to the farm as the best means of procuring a livelihood—at least the surest, as being the most independent calling a man can pursue, the one most free from all cares and anxieties, and approaching nearest the ideal of happiness one can reach in this mundane sphere, I wish to present a few facts showing the profitableness of the business as taken from a book of a Washington County farmer.

The farm consists of 200 acres, divided into mowing, pasturage and wood lands.

The farm, stock and tools, are valued at the following figures:

200 acres at $40	$8,000
Buck comprising 12 cows, 2 horses and young cattle	900
Farming tools	400
Total	$9,300
Paid for hired help out doors	156
" " in doors	50
Cost of boarding help $3 per week	156
Incidental expenses	42
Total	$400

Showing a cost of $400 for carrying on the farm one year, to which add the interest of the sum invested—$558—making a total of $958.

Amount of products sold:

1800 pounds butter at 31cts	$558
Pork sold	60
Other farm products	100
Board for two persons one year	312
Total	$1,030

After deducting expenses and interest of farm and stock, $958, there is a balance left of $72.00 to pay for his own and wife's labor, out of this sum he must clothe his family and pay taxes, he must, of course, give a little for charitable purposes, and pay for preaching. If he is sick there is a Doctor's bill. To pay for all this out of $72.00 he must, indeed, be a financier. If the same sum that is invested in his farm, stock and tools be placed at six per cent interest, (this is a lower rate than most people get), and let himself to any farmer for one year, he would probably be $558 better off at the end of the year than if he had worked his farm, besides having more luxuries for his family.

Farming is a good way to spend money, but a poor way to acquire it.

CITIZEN.

How Much Land Is Necessary To Keep A Cow?

William Johnson, of Allentown, Pa., wishes to keep a cow on half an acre of ground, can he do it?

Yes, if the ground is sufficiently rich and properly managed. Half the ground should be in clover, which will be ready to cut in June and will last three months; one fourth should be put in corn for fodder in drills two feet apart, planted quite thick in the row (12 grains to the foot) and well hoed and weeded; this may be used occasionally to help out the clover, if necessary. The remainder of the ground should be put in turnips, or sugar beets, or parsnips, and may yield 200 bushels, which, with the stalks left over, will feed the cow through the winter and until the clover is ready again. Remember, the tops of the beets and turnips will last quite a time, if used economically. Keep them in a cellar in a heap well pressed down and covered with boards.

Water Proof Soles.

If hot tar is applied to boot soles, it will make them water proof. Let it be as hot as leather will bear without injury, applied with a swab and drying in the fire. The operation may be repeated two or three times during the winter, if necessary.

It makes the surface of the leather quite hard, so that it wears longer, as well as keeps the water out.

It is a good plan to provide boots for winter during the summer, and prepare the soles by tarring, as they will then become hard before they are wanted, and wear twice as long as those unprepared.

Ten years ago I met with a direction to the above, and with some hesitation concluded to have it tried on the soles of a pair of field boots.

By way of experiment, a pair of thin soled morocco boots were tarred with the others, the soles being saturated and the seaming too, all round, including the lower rim of the morocco all round the soles. As these boots are doing service yet and have been much used every summer during the ten years, I mention the fact, because it furnishes what I have wished for, namely, a proof that the tar would not burn or otherwise hurt the leather. The soles remain like horn, and have never required any repair, and even the thin upper apparently cracked in all directions from the first, has never torn but a little on one boot, at the head on the outer side of the foot. It has been oiled once each summer but the soles received but the one thorough tarring. But the soles will take tar best after having the grain worn off slightly. It soon dries in, if exposed to the sun, and the odor, even of gas tar, is quickly overcome by the all-conquering effect of dry earth. A short walk over a fallow field will remove it completely and make is entirely unnecessary to initiate the easterners in the art of taking off the bones at the house unless there be some other reason for it than fresh tarred soles.—Country Gentleman.

Almost any one may be a pretender at farming, the most ordinary intellects may make a living on the farm, but to be a farmer in the full acceptation of the term, to understand the laws that govern nature and properly apply them in agriculture, demands the study and application of a lifetime, and is, indeed, a pursuit worthy the best intellect.

HOMES.—A neat, clean, fresh-aired, sweet, cheerful, well-arranged house exerts a moral influence over its inmates, and makes the members of a family peaceable and considerate of each others feelings and happiness. The connection is obvious between the state of mind thus produced and respect for others, and for those higher duties and obligations which no law could enforce.

The Boy and the Duke.

An English farmer was one day at work in the fields, when he saw a party of huntsmen riding about his farm. He had cautioned his workmen especially against allowing the hunters not ride over, as this crop was in a condition to be badly injured by the passage of the horses. So he dispatched one of his workmen to this field, telling him to shut the gate and then keep watch over it, and on no account to suffer it to be opened.

The boy went as he was bidden, but he was scarcely at his post before the hunters came, peremptorily ordering the gate to be opened. This the boy declined to do, stating the orders he had received and his determination not to disobey them. Threats and bribes were offered alike in vain; one after the other came forward as spokesman, but with a like result. The boy remained immovable in determination not to open the gate, while one of noble presence rode up and said in commanding tone:

"My boy, do you know that I am the Duke of Wellington, and am not accustomed to be disobeyed, and I command you to open that gate, that I and my friends may pass through."

The boy lifted his cap and stood uncovered before the man whom all England delighted to honor, and then answered the duke firmly.

"I am sure the Duke of Wellington would not wish me to disobey orders. I must keep this gate shut, nor suffer any one to pass without my master's express condition."

Greatly pleased, the sturdy old warrior lifted his own hat, and said—

"I honor the boy or man who can be neither bribed or frightened into doing wrong. With an army of such soldiers I could conquer not only the French, but the world."

And handing the boy a glittering sovereign, the old duke put spurs to his horse and galloped away, while the boy ran off to his work, shouting at the top of his voice—'Hurrah! hurrah! I've done what Napoleon couldn't do. I've kept out the Duke of Wellington."

The Accurate Boy.

There was a young man once in the office of a Western Railway superintendent. He was occupying a position that four hundred boys in that city would have wished to get. It was honorable, and "it paid well," being in the line of promotion. How did he get it? Not by having a rich father, for he was the son of a laborer. He began as an errand boy, and did his work accurately. His leisure time he used in perfecting his arithmetic. After a while he learned to telegraph. At each step his employer commended his accuracy and relied on what he did, because he was just right. And it is thus with every occupation. The accurate boy was the favorite one. Those who employ men do not wish to be on the constant lookout, as though they were rogues or fools. If a carpenter must stand at his journeyman's elbow to be sure that his work is right, or if a cashier must run over his book-keeper's column, he might as well do the work himself, as employ another to do it in that way, and it is very certain that the employer will get rid of such an inaccurate workman as soon as he can.

Dennis and the Dog.

A certain witness in an assault and battery case we once heard mixed things up considerably in giving his account of the affair. After relating how Dennis came to him and struck him, he proceeded:

"So, yer honor, I just hauled off and wiped his jaw. Just then, his dog cum along, and I hit him again."

"Hit the dog?"

"No, yer honor, but Dennis, and then I up wid a stun and thowed it at him, and rolled him over and over."

"Threw a stone at Dennis?"

"At the dog, your honor, and he got up and hit me again."

"The dog?"

"No, Dennis. And wid that he stuck his tail 'twixt his legs and ran off."

"Dennis?"

"No, the dog. And when he came back at me he got me down and pounded me, yer honor."

"The dog came back at you?"

"No, Dennis, yer honor, and he isn't hurt any as all."

"Who isn't hurt?"

"The dog, yer honor."

"That will do," said the court. "We have had enough of you and the dog. Step down."

Seven months ago Chicago was almost obliterated from the face of the earth by one of the most terrible conflagrations of modern times; one who saw it then would hardly recognize it now. The rapidity with which it has been rebuilt is marvellous; the unsightly ruins made by the fire are almost replaced by fine blocks of buildings, more substantial and beautiful than those which once occupied their sites, and the value of property is rapidly rising in all parts of the city. On Wabash Avenue and in Jackson, Adams, Monroe, and Jefferson streets the price of land has advanced from $1,000 per front foot to $1,200, and in some instances to $1,500. The Grand Pacific Hotel is the finest and largest of the new buildings, and has 500 rooms; it is rebuilding on its old site and will cost $1,000,000. The Republic Life Insurance building, which was badly damaged by the fire, is rebuilding with stone, iron, and brick, and the many public edifices in process of erection will make Chicago a much finer and better city than it was before. As may readily be believed, in all buildings great precautions are taken against danger fire, Chicago being a "burnt child."

A BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATION.—Away among the Alleghanies there is spring so small that a single ox, on a summer's day drain in. It steals its unobtrusive way among the hills till it spreads into the beautiful Ohio. Thence, it stretches away a thousand miles, leaving on its banks more than a hundred villiages and cities, and many a well cultivated farms, and bearing on its bosom more than half a thousand steamboats. Then, joining the Mississippi, its stretch on away some twelve hundred miles more, till it falls into the great ocean of eternity. It is one of the great tributaries of the ocean, which obedient only to God, shall roll and roar till the angel, with one foot on the land and the other on the sea, shall lift up his hand unto heaven, and swear that time shall be no longer. So with moral influence, a rill, a rivulet, a river an ocean, boundless and fathomless as eternity.

A Danbury poet, named Button, has written a poem. The first line reads, "I'm sitting alone on an inlet." Pretty good for Button.

A Yankee editor out West says: "The march of civilization is onward—slowly like the slow but intrepid steps of a jackass to a peck of corn."

Quaint Poetry.

The Fast Young Man.

BY LEISURE.

Had means thick, knows the style,
He walks the streets each day,
His tailor's bills owes a while
He manages to pay,
He sports a watch and chain of Gold,
The very best he can
Though he's for debt to-morrow sold,
To-day he's the fast young man

His head is gloss of first class style
And facing him just so,
In his boots he could not walk a mile,
He has lots of cargo I know.
He sports the best cigar and cane,
The very best he can
For you must know that it's his aim
To be a fast young man.

With rings and studs oh don't he flash
Of Gold the finest cleaned,
For all the cut their splendid dash
You know they may be 'paste,'
He sports the best unpaid for hat
The very best he can
But you must know for all of that
He is a fast young man.

Upon himself he stacks store clothes,
A spicy shirt and all
Though 'tis but paper as he goes
He flaunts he looks tall,
For on his back he has his all
The best he never can
For he's what people now do call
A very fast young man.

How to carve a turkey—with a knife and fork. It is a far better way than wrestling the fowl apart with your fingers.

A man who was told by a clergyman to remember Lot's wife, replied that he had trouble enough with his own without remembering other men's wives.

"Where are my stays?" asked a lady of her husband. "Here they are," said he throwing his arms around her. Gentlemen, go and do likewise.

Illinois has a new paper called the 'Fire Alarm.' The editor says it will be a 'burning shame' if it does not succeed. We should think he would be greatly 'put out,' if it didn't.

An Irish paper concludes a biography of Robespierre with the following sentence—"This extraordinary man left no children except his brother, who was killed at the same time."

An exchange says—Care to offer coffin adds a nail no doubt, and every turn so merry draws one out. We wonder if it would be worth a man's while to try to grin the nails out of his wife's coffin.

Scene in a street car—Car stops, and young lady enters. Every seat filled. Old gent at the further end rises. "O sir don't rise, I can just as well stand." "Oh gent, "I don't care whether you sit or stand, I'm going to get out."

A young lady, seeking a situation, was interested in an advertisement for some one to do light housekeeping. So she wrote to the advertiser asking where the light-house was, and if there was any way of getting to shore on Sunday.

"Get out of my way—what are you good for?" said a cross old man to a little urchin who happened to stand in his way. The little fellow, as he stepped one side, replied very gently, "They make men of such things as we are."

A schoolmistress, while taking down the names and ages of her pupils, and the names of their parents, at the beginning of the term, asked one little fellow, "What's your father's name?" "Oh you needn't take down his name, he's too old to go to school to a woman," was the reply.]

A lady was urged by her friends to marry a widower, and as an argument they spoke of his two beautiful children. 'Children,' replied the lady, 'are like toothpicks—a person wants her own.'

A lady who refused to give, after hearing a charity sermon, had her pocket picked as she was leaving the church. On making the discovery she said:—"The parson could not find the way to her pocket but the devil did."

Napoleon the first used to carry with him when he went hunting, fifty bottles of wine, but never touched it. On one occasion he was thirsty, and ordered a glass. "All gone," said the valet. "Here after take fifty one bottles, and keep one for me."

A college student, being examined in Locke where he speaks of our relation to the Deity, was asked, "What relation do we most neglect?" He answered, with the utmost simplicity,

"Poor relations, sir!"

Recently a woman was arraigned before a magistrate for some misdemeanor. The usual questions were put to her—"What is your occupation?" "I have none sir," was the reply. "Well, how do you live?" "I live on provisions." She was allowed to go unfined.

"Mr. Brown, you said the defendant was honest and intelligent. What makes you think so? Are you acquainted with him?" "No sir, I have never seen him." "Why then do you come to such a conclusion?" "Because he takes ten newspapers, and pays for them in advance." Verdict for defendant.

A girl forced by her parents into a disagreeable match with an old man whom she detested, when the clergyman came to that part of the service where the bride is asked if she consents to take the bridegroom for her husband, said, "Oh dear no sir, but you are the first person who has asked my opinion about the matter."

VERY SENSIBLE.—Horse dealers who are supposed to know what effects their interest, purchase 'Darley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy,' by the dozen and feed it to there horses for the purpose of improving their condition, which it always does—others should profit by their example —Remember the name, and see that the signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package, Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle, Ont., proprietors for Canada. Sold by all medicine dealers.

—Fellows Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites is an excellent nervous tonic. It exerts a direct influence on the nervous system, and through it it invigorates the body.

HOME.—A private shelter to cover in two loving hearts, the corner stone of which is the virtue of woman, and from whose doors all other blessings of civilized life are to be treated. But yet, no home is complete without a supply of the "Canadian Pain Destroyer," to prevent disease as for the cure of coughs, colds, summer complaints, rheumatism, neuralgia, &c. For sale by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cents per bottle.

All the year round, "Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders" should be given to horses that are "kept up." To horses and cattle that graze in Summer, they should only be given in Winter and Spring.

A common cough or cold should never be trifled with, often when neglected it is soon started into a serious and generally fatal pulmonary disease. The mass of people, aware of this, promptly use "Dyson' Anodyne Balsam," a remedy which has established its reputation for over twenty years —they are always efficacious and exert a most beneficial influence on all the bronchial and pulmonary organs. Sold by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cts. per box.

That iron is valuable as a medicine has long been known, but it is only made its proper use of when it is combined with some vegetable tonic. Hurd's Iron Bitters is the best tonic in general dyspepsia and debility in most all cases.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

For restoring Grey Hair to its natural Vitality and Color

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the glossy freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

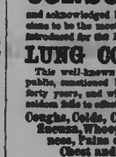
Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.



The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, is derived from its cures, many of which are truly marvellous. Inveterate cases of Scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were aggravated by the scrofulous constitution until they were painfully afflicting, have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, the unseen and unfelt tenant of the organism undermines the constitution, and invites the attack of enfeebling or fatal diseases, without exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develop into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcers in some part of the body. Hence the occasional use of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla is advisable, even when no active symptoms of disease appears. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, in most, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: Tetter, St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Face, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Life Polypus, Neuralgia, and the various Uterine affections of the muscular and nervous systems.

Syphilitic or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for expelling the mineral poison by any medicine. But long-continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Leucorrhœa or Whites, Uterine Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are rendered soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute directions are to be found in our Almanac, supplied gratis, to Consumptives and others, when caused by corrupted blood or Scrofulous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Jaundice, Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from the rankling poisons in the blood. The SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer of the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Low-witted and Nervous, Despondent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

HENRY OWENS

Begs leave to bring to your notice once more his truly celebrated SWING and FORCE PUMPS, which have already received five Provincial First Prizes, and have hitherto met with unparalelled success. There can be no reasonable doubt now after a years trial of the superiority of this pump over all others. H. O. has purchased the sole right under four patents, for the counties of Peterborough and Victoria, and will keep a large stock on hand of pumps, which he will sell at very cheap rate. He has lessened his facilities for making all kinds of pumps, having lately added to his machinery a new and first-class pump boring machine. Every thing in the pump line can be furnished on the shortest notice and Repairs carefully and promptly attended to. Parties ordering Pumps please state depth of well and all other necessary particulars.

Begs leave to inform the public that he is again in the field with REAPERS and MOWERS, and would respectfully call the attention of Farmers to the fact that all the Reapers and Mowers he has sold during the past three years have given undeniable satisfaction. He will have on hand this year Wood's Self-Rake Reapers and Mowers, Aveon Cider Mowers, and Jemmett's Self-Rake Reapers, and any other machine of this description that may be required can be furnished by him on very short notice. Parties intending to purchase Reapers or Mowers this coming season will find it to their advantage to give their orders before the 1st day of May, as up to that date he is permitted to sell on last years prices; after the 1st of May, on account of the rise in Iron, prices of Machines will be raised about 5 per cent. Sample Machine to be seen at my shop.

Henry Owens gladly avails himself of this opportunity to return his most sincere thanks to those friends who have so liberally extended their patronage to him during the past year, and hopes by honest and energetic attention to business to merit a continuance of the same. Remember I will be found at the Shop, in Simcoe Street, one door south of the Market, where I will be happy to see you, and will guarantee my work to be of the best quality and at reasonable prices.

Select Poetry.

The Herald of Summer.

(From All the Year Round.)

I hear a gush of melody I see a flash of green
So I know the Sovereign's coming with the glory of a queen;
For Spring, her welcome herald, has proclaimed it far and wide,
Since the throne of Winter toppled, and the stern-old despot died.

Spring has spread o'er meadow and mountain a carpet for her feet;
Silver daisy, golden king-cup, purple orchis, cow-slip sweet;
Beds she hears amidst a canopy of undulating shade,
Where anemones and violet their woodland home have made.

Pale narcissus and faint daffodil whisper of her by the well,
Where the ferns bend o'er the primrose lest she the secret tell;
But hyacinth and harebell ring the tidings boldly out,
For the breeze to catch the echoes, and answer with a shout.

The busy brooklets, listening have turned the theme to song,
And sing it to the sedges as they gently glide along.
The mountain streams, no longer dumb, join in the joyous lay,
And leaping o'er their rocky bounds, laugh out in the sparkling spray.

Glad butterflies are flattering like banners in the air,
Rich flowers hold up their nectaries and offer incense rare,
The toiling bee hums cheerily, the goats dance in the sun,
The very frogs croak gleefully o'er spring-tide life begun.

No need the tardy cuckoo's note to gossip of the Spring,
Whilst other warblers' tuneful throats have a prophetic ring,
And orchards white with cherry-snow through which blooms apple-blush,
Bring dreams of summer trainings to the birdlings in the bush.

Spring is here! and Summer's coming, with a carnival of light!
For the skylark, like a courtier, has winged his upward flight,
The first to meet Queen Summer in her golden car of state,
And salute her with his anthem close to her palace gate.

Choice Literature.

The Eden of Wildwood.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

Paul Renford was thunder-struck. For once in his life he was aroused to something like consideration of a subject in hand.

Paul was four-and-twenty. At the age of eighteen he had been left an orphan, and heir to an estate worth a million; and his uncle—his mother's brother—had been appointed his guardian. This uncle was Anson Betterman, an enterprising merchant, and a true-hearted man. After Paul came of age, and looked upon the rolling landscape of hill and dale that stretched away beyond the river, "if I owned that sweep of land!"

"It is certainly a pleasant prospect," said his Uncle Betterman, who had come to pay him a visit.

"Aye," added Paul; "and how it must increase in value now that the rail has opened this way."

At this juncture Delia came out and called them into tea. She took Uncle Anson by the arm, and told him he was her prisoner. And he bent over and kissed her, and said it would be a most blessed imprisonment.

"Don't you find it so, Paul?"

"It is heaven where she is!" was Paul's answer.

And upon that she left Uncle Anson and threw her arms about her husband's neck.

"Dear Paul! you are a blessing to me!"

Shortly afterward the old merchant said to his nephew.

"Does the saved mariner look back with longing upon the fearful death he has escaped, and willingly return to storm and wreck?"

"I think not, my boy."

"And can a man in his full sense, long for the dazzle and glare of the empty life that brings only pain and unrest, when a bright spirit like this holds watch and ward for him over an earthly heaven."

He held his wife by the hand as he spoke and his eye was radiant with a light supernal.

It was on the following day—a beautiful day in early autumn—that Paul and Delia walked out upon the gentle hill that sloped up from their cottage. And again he looked off upon the grand spread of landscape beyond the river.

"Ah," he said, "if I owned that land, I would do a great work, Delia."

"What would you do?" asked a voice behind him.

Paul turned and beheld his uncle.

"If you owned that land, what would you do with it?"

"I would make it bloom with life!" replied the youth, eloquently. "Think, now that the rail is laid, how near it is to the city. Think of the toilers there who might find light and comfort in these healthful shades. If I owned that land, I would invite capital to open it to the life that ought to occupy it. I would lay out streets, and portion off lots for dwellings, each with its garden; and I would call it, The Eden of Wildwood."

"And suppose you had the capital of your own, my boy?"

"The Eden of Wildwood should be a verity."

A shadow passed over the old man's face, and then came a shining light. He reached out and took his nephew's hand.

"Paul, the capital is yours—the land is yours!"

Paul would have laughed if his uncle had not looked so solemnly upon him while he spoke. As it was, he simply exhibited bewilderment.

"I heard you express an earnest wish to own the land, and I secured it for you," continued Betterman.

"Uncle! this is a serious jest."

"It is not jest, Paul. In one word Porter Lovett has returned."

"Lovett!—returned?"

"Yes, and your fortune is safe."

Paul Renford was not sure that he was in his waking senses. His uncle was not the man to utter such language jestingly.

"It is true, my boy. Lovett has returned, and every dollar that he ever held of yours is not only safe, but the amount is well-nigh doubled."

"Uncle Anson!—What is this?"

"Don not guess?"

"I dare not. Tell me."

Again the old man took his nephew's hand, and after a brief pause, he answered,—

"Paul, you may blame me if you please,—you may heap wrath upon my head if you like,—but you must know Lovett has only acted at my bidding. I sent him away, and he staid away until I called him back. I saw you falling and sinking, my boy. I saw my my sister's son wasting and dying of a disease which could not be cured except he could be lifted up from the pit into which he had fallen. I saw his young manhood, so full of native power and goodness,—bowed and—"

"Stop! stop!" said Paul, raising his other hand, "I see it all."

"And do you blame me?"

"Blame you?"

"Aye, do you blame me for the hard, harsh remedy I applied?"

"Blame you, uncle!—Shall I blame you for my salvation? Shall I blame you for my manhood's health and strength and vigor! Shall I blame you for—this?" And he let go his uncle's hand, and drew his wondering wife to his side.

"I only pray God that the return of the lost wealth may not cause my wife to love me less. It can never overshadow with its bulk these other joys which have grown up from the better life."

"It was all as Uncle Betterman had said. Lovett had gone away at his order, having first secured the property so that no harm could befall it,—and it had all been done that Paul might be thrown upon his own resources and thus saved from the sloth that was eating away his young life. And it had worked well.

And when Paul Renford had received back his great fortune he was true to the promise he had made concerning the beautiful tract of land beyond the river; and this is the true story of how the toilers of the city came to be blessed with those pleasant, healthful homes in the Eden of Wildwood.

Richness of the Soil in Michigan.

A man in Detroit gave me some idea of the richness of the soil in that vicinity. He said there wasn't any place on earth where things grew as they do there. He said his wife never made bread. She always made little biscuits the size of an egg, and she would leave 'em an hour to swell by themselves, and they would grow into twelve pound loaves. I thought to myself, you are a loafer. He continued his growing tale, and said: "Once there was a man. He went into the woods and chopped down four trees. He used the four stumps for corner posts, and he built him a nice log house on those stumps. Then he and his family went to live in the house. The next morning he found the house and family up sixty feet in the air, with a lot of Indians down cellar waiting to cut their hair off, and the Indians did scalp the whole of 'em." "Stranger," said I, "you don't mean to tell me those trees grew sixty feet in one night." "Sir, I do," says he, "and not only that, they hoisted the house up with 'em." "Are you sure it wasn't sixty-one feet feet?" I asked meekly. "Sir," said he, "I never prevaricate, especially on one foot." "So they took and scalped 'em all, did they?" "They did," said he. "How, in the name of Mary, who had the little lamb, did they get up to 'em?" I asked. Says he, "Respected sir, those Indians each one sawed off a tree; then each Indian sat on a stump, and those stumps grew the Indians up to the house, and then they scalped the family." It certainly was the greatest case of up a tree I ever heard of. "Stranger, that story is pretty tough, but I believe it, because I know something about growing trees, and I know they grow darned fast sometimes. My father had some good soil on his place; good soil for trees. He couldn't afford to keep a dog, because there was so many of young 'uns. He had to boil what bones was left to make soup for us. He had some trees, and in the place of a dog he kept some of the bark off those trees in the house to scare away robbers, because that bark would last all night. One day I used some of the wood to make some tooth-picks, and as sure as sour sarpice, stranger, those tooth-picks grew so that next day I sold 'em for telegraph poles, and they had to be sawed in two before they could be used." The stranger got up. Says I, "Where are you going?" Says he, "Good day, sir." Says I, "Good day, sir."

A Thrilling Adventure.

It was about the year 1805 that I settled in Virginia, near the Falls of Kanawha. The country at that time was an unbroken wilderness But few settlements had been made by the whites, and they were so far apart as to render vain all hopes of assistance in case of attack from hostile Indians, numbers of whom still infested the neighborhood. I lived there alone with my wife for several months unmolested and by dint of perseverence when young and hardy, had succeeded in making quite a clearing in the forest, which I planted with corn, and which promised an abundant yield.

One morning, after we had dispatched our humble meal, and I had just prepared to venture forth upon my accustomed routine of labor, my attention was arrested by the tinkling of a cowbell in the cornfield.

"There," said my wife, "the cow is in the cornfield."

But the ear of the backwoodsman becomes by education very acute, especially from the fact that his safety often depends upon the nice cultivation of that sense.

I was not so easily deceived. The sound was repeated.

"That," said I, in reply to my wife's remark, "was not the tinkle of a bell upon a cow, but a decoy from some Indians who wishes to draw me into an ambush."

Believing this to be the case, I took my old musket, and seeing that it was properly loaded, stole cautiously around the field towards the spot from which the sound seemed to proceed.

As I suspected, there in a clump of bushes crouched an Indian waiting for me to appear in answer to his decoy bell that he might send a bullet to my heart. I approached without discovering myself to him until within shooting distance, then I raised my piece and fired. The bullet sped true to its mark and the Indian fell dead.

Not knowing but what he was accompanied by others, I returned with full speed to the cabin, and having firmly barricaded the door, I watched all day for the companions of the Indian I had killed.

To add to the danger and seeming hopelessness of my situation I discovered that I had but one shot left, and if attacked by numbers I should be entirely in their power. Determined to do the best with the powder, I put it into the musket and then waited for the approach of night, feeling sure of an attack. Night came at last. A beautiful moonlight night it was, too, and favored me greatly, as I would thereby be able to observe the movement of the enemy as they approached the cabin.

It was some two hours after nightfall, and yet I had neither heard nor seen a sign of the Indians, when suddenly I was startled by the baying of my dog at the stable. The stable stood a little to the west of the cabin, and between the two was a patch of clear ground on which the light of the moon fell unobstructed. Judging from the noise at the stable that they would advance from that direction, I posted myself at the port-hole on that side of the cabin.

I had previously placed my wife on the cross-pole in the chimney, so that if our enemies effected an entrance into our cabin, she might climb out through the window and make her escape. For myself I entertained no hope, but determined to sell my life dearly.

With breathless anxiety I waited at the port-hole. At length I saw them emerge from the shadow of the stable and advance across the open ground towards my cabin. One—two—six—great heavens! stalwart Indians, armed to the teeth and urged on by the hope of revenge, and I alone to oppose them with one charge of powder. My case was desperate, indeed. With quick and stealthy steps, in close single file, they approached, and were already within a few yards of the house, when a slight change in the movement of the forward Indian changed the six, so that a portion of the side of each was uncovered. They were in range, and one aim would cover all. Quick as thought I aimed and fired. As the smoke cleared away I could hardly credit what my senses showed me as the result of my shot. The fifteen slugs with which I had loaded the musket had done their work well. five of the six Indians lay dead upon the ground and the sixth had disappeared.

Although no enemies are now in sight, I did not venture forth until morning. There lay the bodies of five Indians, undisturbed, together with the rifle of the other. Securing the arms and ammunition of the fallen Indians, I followed up the trail of the missing one until I reached the river, beyond which point I could discover no trace whatever. From the amount of blood which marked his trail, together with unmistakable evidence that he had picked his way with difficulty, I was led to believe he was mortally wounded, and in order to prevent his body falling into the hands of the foe, he had groped his way to the river and thrown himself into the current which had borne it away.

Hints for Young Mothers.

The three requisites for babies are plenty of sleep, plenty of food, plenty of flannel. The saying that man is a bundle of habits is as true of babies as it is of grown children. If an infant is accustomed from its birth to sleep from 6 o'clock at night till daylight, the habit of early sleep will be formed, and the mother may have all her evenings to herself. If the infant sleeps all night, a long morning nap will naturally come about dinner time, after which the child, except when very young, should be kept awake till 6 o'clock. Perseverance in this routine will soon result in securing quiet evenings for both child and parent. Some mothers have a long season every morning and every night in getting the baby asleep. They rock them and sing to them till Morpheus infolds them. With most children this is entirly unnecessary. An infant can be accustomed by a few days training to go to sleep itself for a morning nap as well as for the long rest at night. A mother has duties to herself as well as to her offspring. While she should exercise constant care in securing its utmost physical comfort, she should secure rest and recreation for herself. In no other way can she keep fresh in feeling and buoyant in spirit. Nothing is so wearing as the unceasing tending of a fretful baby. Every means should be employed to aid the child in taking care of itself and giving as little trouble as possible. It may learn in babyhood to amuse itself with toys or by watching movements going on around it. Fashion as well as good sense requires infants' dresses to be made with long sleeves and high in the neck. Fashion requires children of all ages to be warmly clad. Flannel should insure the whole body, with the exception of the head and hands. The fruitful cause of colic in infants is the nakedness of their necks and arms. Regularity in feeding is as important as any of the other requisites. Babies cry as often from being overfed or fed too frequently as from hunger. Let the mother obey the dictates of common sense in this matter and not force food into a baby's stomach for every little complaint it makes. Children of three and four years old need more sleep than they generally get. For irritable and nervous children sleep is a specific, and it can be assured to them only by the force of habit. Many light forms of disease may be cured by keeping a child in a uniform temperature and in quiet. Let the young mothers who read this experiment upon them few suggestions, and we are sure they will have many an hour in the summer for reading and thought.

Lizzie, May [illegible]

Phoebe Campbell, has confessed to the crime of murdering her husband, and her confession has been forwarded by the Crown Attorney to the Attorney General. It covers eight pages of foolscap, and was given to the Sheriff on Saturday evening, all in her own hand writing. She commences by saying that her husband was very bad, that she had been used harshly for some time previous to the deed, and that he was jealous of her, &c., which made her quite hate him. She told Coyle of this, and he sympathized with her, and took her part, and said she had got to love him, and he would do all in his power for her. Finally Coyle suggested that they would get along well together, and asked her, if he made her a free woman, would she marry him? She did not give him a decided answer then. This occured two monthis previous to the murder. At first they thought of poisoning Campbell by putting poison, which they had purchased, into his food; but this did not succeed and it was then determined to kill him. Coyle she says, has bought a pistol in St. Marys, as was supposed. She states that Coyle and her made it up to shoot Campbell on the Wednesday before the deed was committed, but that she got frightened and went to bed and fell asleep, and frustrated the attempt that time. The next day Coyle saw her and asked her why she had not waited for him, as she had promised him; that he, (Coyle), had went round the house but found they were all asleep. At this interview it was agreed that the murder sould take place on the Friday. On that evening Campbell, she says, read his Bible, said his prayers, and after chatting there some time, went to bed about ten o'clock, while she sat up and sewed some clothing.

Before Coyle came, which was about 11 o'clock, she says she gave the child the breast, and on a signal being given, she knew Coyle was out there, and went out and spoke to him some time. In the course of this conversation they talked about how the deed should be done. He wanted her to fire the pistol. She replied she was afraid she could not. It was then agreed that he should discharge the pistol. Previous to going out, she had put the lights out, and the house was all dark. The two then went in, and Coyle tried to fire the Pistol, but it would not go off. He then said he would get the axe, and then went towards the cupboard for that purpose. He got it from under the cupboard, and struck him on the head with the blunt side of it. Campbell, after this blow, managed to get up off the bed, and struggled desperately around the house with Coyle, for some time on the floor, and eventually got towards the door." While in this position Coyle appeared to be getting the better of deceased, who was becoming weak from loss of blood, and determined to finish the horrible affair. He then told her to get the butcher-knife and cut his throat, the two men being at that time clutched together. Coyle when she approached him, took the knife from her, and drew it across Campbell's throat. The prisoner is very particular on this point, and reiterates that Campbell's throat was cut at this time, and not, as the doctors said, sometime afterward.) Campbell then fell on the floor, and was not moved. She persists in saying that there was no light in the house while the deed was being committed. Coyle, after murdering Campbell, went out side and washed himself, and after doing so came in and lit a match so as see if there was any blood on his face or clothing. Coyle then went away to her father's. She states that she was never in bed that night. Coyle's clothes were concealed for a short time, and were afterwards burned. After Coyle had gone a short time she went out into the field and gave the alarm. She says that neither her father nor her mother, nor any of the family knew anything about it. She also states that Coyle told her he got out through the window in her father's house that night, and reached the ground by a ladder.

The confession is signed, "Mrs. Phoebe Campbell."

Remedy for Freckles, Sunburn, and Mosquito Bites.

Freckles indicate an excess of iron in the blood, we are told, the sun acting on the particles in the skin as it does on indelible ink, bringing out the color. A very simple way of removing them is said to be as follows:—

Take finely powdered nitre (saltpetre) and apply it to the freckles by the finger moistened in water and dipped in the powder. When perfectly done and judiciously repeated, it will remove them effectually and without trouble.

An old English prescription for the skin is to take half a pint of skim-milk—so poor as to be blue—slice into it as much cucumbers as it will cover, and let it stand an hour; then bath the face and hands, washing them off with fair water when the cucumber extract is dry. The latter is said to stimulate the growth of hair where it is lacking, if well and frequently rubbed in. It would be worth while to apply it to high foreheads and bald crowns.

Rough skins arising from exposure to the winds in riding, rowing or yachting, trouble many ladies, who will be glad to know that an application of cold cream or glycerine at night, washed off with fine carbolic soap in the morning, will render them presentable at the breakfast table, without looking like women that followed the hounds, blowzy and burned. The simplest way to obviate the bad effects of the sun and wind, which are apt on occasion to revenge themselves for the neglect shown them by the fair sex too often, is to rub the face, throat and arms well with cold cream or pure almond oil before going out. With this care one may come from a berry party, or a sail, without a trace of that ginger bread effect too apt to follow

Wheat in Toronto ranges from $1.45 to $1.57 per bushel.

Hay was from $15 to $19 a ton on the market, yesterday. Oats from 45c. to 46c. a bushel. Potatoes 80c. a bag. Now that sowing and planting season is over, we may expect a better supply of those articles.

Sir John A. McDonald promises to bring down a Bill to fix the representation, according to the Census, on Friday.

The Act of the Ontario Presbytery in cutting off Mr. Windell from being a minister of the Presbyterians Church has been sustained by the Commissioners of the Synod of Toronto.

The Washington Government has succeeded in agreeing to accept the supplemental Treaty offered by Great Britain, with the mere verbal alteration of dropping the word such. The British Government, will, in all probability, accept the American idea, and allow the Treaty to go to the Arbitrators in this amended form.

The Canadian Freeman says, the Hon John Carling is to be the next Lieut. Governor of Ontario.

Rev. Mr. Wilde of Belleville, it is said has been invited to take the pastorate of a church in New York. Salary $5,000 a year.

A young man named Robert Gardner, was drowned at Orillia on Friday morning, while siding in breaking up a "jam" of timber.

Ralph Featherstone of West Zora cut his hand a few days ago, while pruning trees, shortly after he skinned a cow that had died, and it is thought that some poisonous matter from the carcase entered the wound, causing death in a few hours.

Mr. Wm Kennedy of Verulam had his barns and sheds destroyed by fire on the 16th inst., about 2 o'clock a.m. Loss $1,000. Insurance only $400. Supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

The next regular monthly meeting of the Peterborough Fire Brigade, will take place on Thursday, 6th of June. Their monthly meetings in future will be held on the first Thursday in every month, and not on Tuesday's as formerly.

Matters in Mexico are assuming a more settled form.

Spain.—The Revolutionists are being defeated almost everywhere, and the Government becoming stronger. The Spaniards are not prepared for a Republican form of Government.

Cuba.—The insurrection in Cuba is about at an end. The Captain General at Havanna has issued a proclamation offering freedom to all insurgents who will surrender, with their arms, up to 30th May. This includes all classes and colors, except a few leaders.

Bobcaygeon.—The Locks at Bobcaygeon have given way and navigation is stopped on account of this. If the road had been pushed through from Peterboro to Mud Lake, what an opportunity this would be to turn the direction of trade this way besides affording an opportunity to the lumbermen to get their timber and lumber to market in proper season.

Fishing for Gold.—The oyster fishermen near Staten Island, are having a rich time of it fishing for gold. They are said to have found gold which tradition represents as having been deposited long since by the Pirate Kidd. The precious metal is taken from the bottom of the "sound" by means of oyster tongs. Over $2,000,000 have at various times been recovered in this way.

Shade Trees.—A quantity of trees have been supplied by the town to the applicants, and we are informed that double the number were applied for, but owing to the late start made, no more could be gotten out this season. We hope that next year the work will be commenced in good time, that sufficient time may be allowed to get good trees and plenty of them.

The School Trustees are planting more trees around the school grounds. We think it a pity that some of the prisoners in the adjoining stone building sentenced to hard labor, could not be employed to replace on the Court House Hill the trees broken by Johnston's cow, particularly as the Town would have provided the trees. But it is perhaps too much to expect that Nobody will attend to Everybodys business.

We understand that Mr. Dumble has instructions to sell by public auction a number of building lots lying immediately south of Judge Dennistoun's residence. The locality is desirable and the lots will no doubt be eagerly sought after. We are glad to see those absentee lands in the market, as their continuance in commons is an injury to those who reside in the neighborhood and an injustice to persons whose enterprise in improving adjoining lands inures to the benefit of those who make money, not by their own but by other men's efforts.

The Dominion Telegraph.—The posts for this new line of telegraph have been planted through the town on its way to Lindsay. We don't anticipate that they will grow, for their tops now seem to rise and mount to heaven—they are thirty feet high, somewhat unsightly, and the prospect of having the limbs of trees cut away to clear the wires, as is commonly done, regardless of the feelings of the owner, is anything but charming. But "what can't be cured must be endured' as says the old maxim. We must put up with some inconvenience, as it is the price of our civilisation. Mr. Cox has usually served us well in the telegraphing line, but as opposition is the life of trade, we suppose a little wholesome competition will not do any harm.

Supposed to be Drowned.—Ned Rafferty, well known in the village of Ashburnham, is missing since Friday evening last, and is supposed to be drowned. He was last seen near the race south of Rogers' Mills, in the village, on Friday evening about 10 o'clock, enquiring the way to Calcutt's brewery. It is thought he must have fallen into the race, and been carried away with the stream. He was the worse of strong drink when last seen. We understand that Mr W. Beal and Mr. H. Cluxton in a boat on the lake on Saturday, saw the dead body of a man floating past the "point" and made several unsuccessful attempts to rescue it owing to the strength of current and high winds at the time. Some suppose the body to be that of Rafferty. He was over fond of whisky, generally, and it may have cost him his life at last.

Broke Ground.—Messrs. Cox & Bradburn who have purchased the land on the east side of George street, north of J. T. Henthorn's Block, are digging out the cellars to erect a handsome block of stores When Mr. Bradburn builds on the opposite side, as he purposes this season, George Street will have assumed a much more imposing appearance.

Mr. Cox purposes erecting handsome bank buildings on the vacant corner of Water and Simcoe streets.

We would very much like to see a few more of our worthy citizens who owe something to the Town, where they have amassed their fortunes, spend a little of their gains in brick and mortar or in starting manufacturies of some kind.

Twenty thousand of their dollars invested thus, would be better appreciated by the citizens, than ten times the amount put out on mortgage, and when they shuffle off this mortal coil it would insure for them much more imposing obsequies A word to the wise is sufficient.

Cricket Match.—The First Cricket Match of the season will be played on the Ashburnham ground, on Monday next, June 3rd, between the Peterboro Cricket Club and the Maple Leaf Cricket Club of this town. Wickets to be pitched at 1 p.m., sharp.

We see from the Daily Globe that a Troop of Cavalry is authorized for the County of Peterborough. Head quarters at Peterborough. H. C. Rogers, Esq., to be Captain. And another troop, head quarters at Lakefield, Mr. R. C. Strickland, to be Captain, Provisional Lieut., Mr. James Elton, and Coronet, Mr. Kenneth Urqhart.

Ontario Custom Mills—Mr. Munroe's Mills, Dickson's Race, are now ready for work. Farmers can have their gristing attended to as usual.

The Messrs. Paton Moir & Co. have brought out six masons from the "Old Country" to work at the erection of the new buildings now in course of erection at Auburn. The foundation of the buildings are built, and work is progressing favorably.

A severe hail storm passed over a portion of the County of Peel on the 27th instant; many of the hailstones being over four and a half inches in circumference.

New Steamer.—Mr. Calcutt's new steamer, "Whistle-Wing" we understand, will be ready to commence her regular trips by the tenth of June. She is receiving her machinery, and being completed with all haste. She appears to be a handsome little craft and fitted for River and Lake trade. we trust that merchants and others will patronize the enterprising owner, so that the speculation may be successful. Competition in the carrying trade has often been prayed for, now that it is about to be realized through the enterprise of Mr. Calcutt, he deserves a fair show of the carrying trade of the Town. The steamer, too, will afford splendid opportunities to pleasure seekers to visit Rice Lake and enjoy its scenery, and return in good time by the steamer.

JOHN HOWDEN.

Ashburnham, May 23, 1872. 21-4in

Let Peterboro Prosper.

Any one who has watched the progress of our good town during the last eight years, cannot but be gratified at the rapid improvement she is making. On every side handsome and substantial dwellings are being erected, while the business part of the town is in uniformity, compactness and quality of buildings, second to no town in Canada.

The improvement in our streets and the attention to planting trees and improving the houses, is very marked

We augur a prosperous future for Peterboro, if the ball is taken on the hop. We seem now to have it in our power to decide the future by our own course. Let us all unitedly act for the interest of our good town, laying aside every motive but a desire to advance the common welfare. Only by so doing can we accomplish satisfactory results.

We believe that the active and successful men of the town should lead in every effort to advance the public interest. Let them do so and the many who look up to their judgments—knowing the consequences are more felt by them, either for good or bad—will support them in their efforts and thank them for the labors which may be crowned with success.

Bowmanville Railroad.

The township of Emily has refused to grant a Bonus to the Bowmanville and Bobcaygeon Railroad.

The vote stood at the close of the Poll as follows:

In favor of bonus	115
Against	293
Majority Against	178

The Bonus for the same Road was also lost in Manvers, but we did not learn the majority against it.

RAILWAYS.

There is something very unaccountable in the action of some of the leading men in the northern part of this county, in reference to railway matters.

Not long since they were the warm advocates and friends of the Peterboro and Haliburton Railway. It no sooner passed into the hands of a man the most likely to build it, than opposition commenced, and its former friends became its enemies—both in northern and southern parts of the county.

The northern men are found in Toronto coquetting with the Nipissing Company, and offering a bonus to a Company that would take away the trade of the north to Lindsay or elsewhere, to the detriment of Peterboro, and yet without the least guarantee or perhaps the faintest hopes of advantage to the people of northern Peterboro.

The Lindsay and Fenelon Falls would only pass through a very small portion of the county, and have its business terminus in Lindsay. Whereas the Peterboro and Haliburton Railway would pass through 60 miles of territory in the county of Peterboro and would have its business terminus in the county town. It is difficult to account for the action of those men, living in the county, representing its interests, and professing to be ready to advocate these, yet lending their encouragement and offering their money to build up Lindsay and Toronto, and to some degree, at least, injuring the prospects of Peterboro.

In the mean time, however, their scheme has failed and there is every appearance of the Bowmanville scheme failing also. The Townships of Emily and Manvers have refused to grant any bonuses.

Verulam would sooner cast her lot in with a road to Peterboro, if the work was only certain. Bobcaygeon people too would sooner come this way, we have reason to believe.

Now we ask what are the people of Peterboro doing? Surely they are not unmindful of the contest of other roads to secure the trade north of us. If it is worth $100,000 to Bowmanville, and $50,000 to Lindsay, it must be worth something to us, and we trust that our public men will not forget, the effort Toronto is making to get behind us. Lindsay too is aware of the trade she would loose if we had a road north, and they are at work.

Let our public men get to work and we may yet secure the first road northward.

The Dominion Parliament.

Nothing of very great importance has transpired at Ottawa since the passing of the Bill giving effect to the Washington Treaty. The votes on that Bill has made Sir John A Macdonald haughty and overbearing. He will not in many cases give even a reason for his conduct, merely saying he wills it so.

Mr. Blake introduced a Bill to secure independence of the Senate, providing that no one in receipt of any pay from the Crown could be nominated to the Senate. But John A summoned up his followers and gave it the six months hoist. So regardless were they of justice, or of securing men above suspicion for the position of Senators, that they cared not. If the dictator says vote, they vote yea or nay.

All are aware that we have two Election Laws in the Dominion, one for the election of members for the local legislature, and one for members for the Commons.

The machinery for carrying out each of these laws is necessarily very different. The election for local legislature occupy ing only one day, while the election for the Commons occupies two days.

In the matter of a contested election, in Ontario, it is tried by a Judge, and tends to secure the return of the right person with the least possible delay—even for the first session of the Parliament. While an election to the Commons if contested is still to be tried before a parliamentary committee, which too often is more concerned to return a political partizan than to do justice, it not unfrequently being the case that a member disqualified by law, sits and votes two or three Sessions before his case is disposed of.

Mr. Blake introduced a Bill to assimilate the election laws of the Province and of the Dominion, and to provide for trial of contested elections before a Judge, but John A. saw that this would be likely to interfere with some of his creatures, and defeated it.

During the approaching election the old law will be in force, money can be used as freely as ever, bribery and corruption can go unpunished, for at least one more election, and no doubt at all but some will be ready to take advantage of the opportunity, if thereby they can hope to secure a temporary success.

Reform in this respect is postponed indefinitely, and that at the end of a man who has long used all the opportunities a loosely worded Statute afforded, to retain power and its advantages.

Literary Table.

London Society for May has been received through Mr. Kidd. This number will be found quite entertaining to lovers of that kind of reading. London Society can be ordered most conveniently at Kidd's Book Store, Peterboro.

Wood's Household Magazine for June has been received and the contents are very varied and contains much that is amusing and instructive. It is only $1.00 a year, orders can be sent to S. S. Wood & Co., Newburgh, N.Y., or the magazine can be obtained through Mr. Kidd or Monies.

The Welcome Guest—This is the title of a very neat monthly magazine, issued by the "Pure Gold" Publishing Company, Toronto. It is neatly illustrated and contains a large quantity of reading matter both amusing and instructive. Each number is to contain a complete story besides miscellaneous reading in prose and poetry. It is only $1.50 a year, and can be obtained direct from the publishers or from Kidd or Monies, Peterboro.

Ontario Templar.—We have received the first number of the Ontario Templar, published in Toronto, and as its title implies, in the interests of the Order, and the advance of "Total Abstinence." It will appear weekly. The Ontario Templar is neatly printed; contains excellent reading matter, and will prove, no doubt, an acceptable visitor. We wish the Proprietor the success his venture deserves.

THE QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY.

The loyal subjects of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, testified their respects for her by making her birthday a day of mirth and jollity.

The morning appeared somewhat unfavorable, but notwithstanding a large concourse of people from the country found their way to Town to assist in doing Her honor.

The firemen had made arrangements for a gala day, and had invited the Fire Brigades of Port Hope and Lindsay to visit our good town. A few minutes after 11 o'clock the train from Port Hope arrived bringing the Fire Brigade of that town, but owing to the Lindsay Brigade having made previous arrangements for an excursion they were not able to file an appearance. The Firemen met their brethern from Port Hope at the Station, and forming in procession marched through the principal streets of the Town and Ashburnham.

At Twelve a trial of the Steam Fire Engine took place on the Market square. It is needless to say like previous trials that this was a successful one. Fire and water and a reasonable distance is all that she requires to enable her to throw over the highest block in town, even with 1,000 feet of hose. The Brigades and guests then retired to the Drill Shed where dinner was provided. His Honor Judge Dennistoun, presided. The Mayor and several prominent citizens of Port Hope, and the Mayor of Peterboro, the Warden, John Walton, Esq., and other prominent citizens of Peterboro, enjoyed the liberality of the Firemen. After dinner the usual loyal toasts were given when all dispersed to enjoy themselves as best they could. Many went to witness the game of Lacrosse and the amusements in the Cricket ground, where an immense crowd witnessed the game and races. Several of the prizes in running and jumping were carried off by our Port Hope friends. A shower or two marred the sport a little.

The days proceedings wound up with a grand Torchlight Procession and Fireworks, and we but speak the minds of many when we say that the display of fireworks was the best we have ever had in Town.

The Grand Junction Railway

In the House of Commons there has been a debate over a New Brunswick Railway Bill which has led to throwing some doubts on the power of the Dominion Government to grant or revive a charter for any railway wholly in one of the provinces. It appears that the Houlton R. R. is partly in New Brunswick and partly in Maine, and that under a statute of the local Legislature of N. B. the town of St. Stephens in New Brunswick agreed to assist the road to the Maine boundary, towns in Maine assisting to the New Brunswick boundary line. The people of St. Stephens refused to pay their bonds or debentures, and an application was made to the Superior Courts of N. B. to compel them to pay. The court, however, decided that the local legislature had no power to compel the payment of the bonus, that that power rested with the Dominion Parliament, and hence the bill before parliament.

The following is the substance of the Debate on the Bill in question:

RAILWAY BONDHOLDERS.

Col. Gray moved the second reading of the Bill to do justice to the bondholders in the case of the Houlton Branch Railway Company of the Province of New Brunswick, incorporated by Act of the Assembly, 30 Vic. cap. 54. He said in explanation of the Bill that the inhabitants of the town of St. Stephens, in the County of Charlotte, N. B., desired some years ago to have a branch constructed to connect the town with a railway running into the United States. They accordingly agreed with the Company, which was an American corporation, that if the Company gave $30,000 for the purpose of constructing the branch they would give $15,000. The first step taken in the matter was before Confederation, but the Act authorising the town to issue debentures in aid of the railway was passed by the Local Legislature after the union. The debentures were issued under the authority of this Act, and the railway was built, in consequence of which property in the town had greatly increased in value. Since then, however, a ratepayer had taken exception to the legality of the debentures, refusing to pay his share of the assessment, and the matter having been carried to the Supreme Court of New Brunswick it was there decided that the Act authorizing them having been passed since Confederation and for the benefit of a railway running into a foreign country beyond the powers of the Province, it was ultra vires of the New Brunswick Legislature to pass such an Act.

Mr. Mackenzie said some of the provisions of the Bill seemed to him to be extraordinary, and he would like to know the views of the Minister of Justice with regard to them.

Sir John Macdonald said he had read the Bill with some little care, and he must say it appeared to him to be doubtful whether, under the circumstances, this Parliament had power to pass the Act or if it did pass it, whether by so doing it would render the debentures valid. He must say that he had a very great doubt upon that point. (Hear, hear.) As he understood the facts they were these:—A company had been incorporated by the Legislature of New Brunswick to build a railway to the provinces line. The Legislature, of course had the power to do that, under the British North American Act. It then appeared that a foreign company in the State of Maine, had offered to the people of St. Stephen that if they would contribute towards its equipment the company would construct a branch line to connect with the railway authorised by the Legislature, which was to run to the Province line. This had been agreed to and an act passed the Legislature authorising the justice of St. Stephen to issue, on behalf of the municipality, debentures for the purpose of aiding this foreign company in the carrying on of the work of connecting the town by railway with the province line. It was not at all clear to his mind that the judgment of the court, on declaring these invalid, was a correct one. (Hear, hear.) That was his view of the matter, but he stated it under reservation, as he had not yet had time to look into it thoroughly. It appeared to him that, if the power of legalizing the debentures existed anywhere, it was in the Local Legislature. If that was the case then it will not rest with this Parliament to interfere. This was not a question of the construction of a railway connecting New Brunswick with a foreign country, and declared to be for the general benefit of Canada. If it were, Parliament would have a right to legislate on the matter; but as the case stood, if Parliament passed a bill declaring the debentures had been legally issued, the court would have just as strong reasons for declaring that the Act was unconstitutional, as it had for deciding against the Provincial Act (Hear, hear.)

Mr. R. B. Wood maintained that the Dominion Legislature had no power in the matter. Without any disrespect to the New Brunswick court that had decided against the legality of these debentures, he would say that a more imbecile set of of reasons. He referred to several Bills that had been considered by the Railway Committee, for the chartering of Railway Companies, and held with regard to these that the power sought was within the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislature. The British American Act, he argued, gave authority to the Local Legislature to authorize the construction of a railway to the limit of the Province, and it would be absurd to hold that, because the work extended into a foreign country, it therefore passed out of the jurisdiction of the Local Legislature for neither the general nor the Local Legislature could give power to carry on a work beyond the frontier of the country. The only way in which a Provincial Railway running to the boundary could be brought within the jurisdiction of Parliament would be to declare it a work for the general benefit of Canada. With regard to these debentures, Parliament had no power to legislate in any way, and the whole matter should be left in the hands of the Local Legislature.

Mr. Mills said that the principle had been laid down that it was not in the power of a Local Legislature to give aid to any body or corporation that derives its existence from the Parliament of Canada; neither conversely would it be in the power of Parliament to give aid to any body corporation deriving its existence from a local Legislature. If that principle was sound then the course to pursue would be to delegate the whole matter to the Legislature of New Brunswick. There was another point which he thought deserved attention; it was whether it was in the power of Parliament or of a Local Legislature to give aid out of the public monies to any body or corporation that was of a purely private character; in other words, had Parliament or a Local Legislature power to tax the people for any other than a public purpose. He thought it was quite clear taxation could not be imposed for any private object. Railway Corporations were private bodies, and Municipalities might aid them by taxing; but if they gave a bonus they would thereby deprive the minority of any protection. He denied that any power could be conferred to enable the municipality to levy a rate in aid of any work that was not a public work, and he read from a decision of an amnesty Judge to establish this point.

Mr. Tilley said if the doctrine of hon. member on the point was correct, there was a large number of Railway Securities in New Brunswick, where railways had been constructed by the aid of Provincial as well as Municipal bonuses, which would be entirely worthless. (Hear, hear) He took it for granted that the Act of the Local Legislature had been submitted to the Minister of Justice and declared by him to be such an act as it was within the power of the Legislature to pass. The Court having decided, however, that the Provincial Legislature had no right to pass such a law; it remained for Parliament, and he could see no other authority which could be appealed to—to compel justice being done. The town of St. Stephens had given its assent to the issue of the bonds, and he could not see that there were any sound objections to the confirmation of that assent by Parliament

Mr. Mackenzie said every one would agree that justice ought to be done; but the question was whether Parliament was able to do them justice. If this House had no power it would be no more than a farce to pass an act that the court might afterwards declare to be unconstitutional. He did not pretend to say the House had not the power, but that was a position in which it might be placed. It appeared to him, taking a general view of the matter, that if Parliament was competent to legalise the bonds, it was competent to authorize the municipality of any of the Provinces to grant aid to any railway or other work it chooses. If then it was competent to authorise them to do certain things it would be equally competent to compel the Municipalities to do this. This would go far towards establishing a centralizing system which would be very objectionable to the Provinces, and in his opinion it was a danger to be apprehended and avoided. He was quite willing that justice should be done, but still the House must be guarded by principles of public law and by the provisions of the constitution under which we were governed. There was another point worthy of consideration, whether it was right to appeal to this House to make good what a court of law had decided to be invalid, he doubted very much whether it should be attempted to set aside by an Act of Parliament the decision of the highest court in one of the Provinces. He could not help thinking, although of course he did not express the opinion with the confidence of professional knowledge, that the judgement of the court was adverse to the common interpretation of the constitution. If Parliament passed the Bill in its present shape a number of measures that had passed the Local Legislatures in the belief that they were constitutional would be presented in a new light, and doubt might be thrown upon them as not being Acts which it was within the power of those Legislatures to enact.

Mr. Anglin supported the bill. He said it had been the invariable practice of this House to exercise jurisdiction in the case of all railways which ran to the boundary of a province and into a foreign country. The point of the hon. member for Brant was not, he thought, a vital one. That hon gentleman had argued that, because there was no power anywhere to authorize a work beyond the frontier, it was within the jurisdiction of the Local Legislature to authorize works to the boundary line, on the ground that such works were within the Province. Before that was determined, the question of what was a boundary line had to be settled. As a line was geometrically length without breadth, it remained to be decided what the exact meaning of "line" was when applied to works extending to the frontier. The phrase in the constitution was—"extending beyond the limits of the Provinces," and with regard to three words there should be a final understanding before the question of jurisdiction was conclusively settled. So far Parliament has assumed jurisdiction, and he said that authority should be exercised in the case where a simple act of justice was to be done.

Mr. Mackenzie said the Local Legislature had held that they had a right, under the authority of the British North America Act, to charter railways which ran within the limits of the Province, and the Ontario Legislature had passed an Act authorizing the construction of the Canada Southern Railway, which ran from one boundary to the other. Then it would be remembered that, some years ago, when the St. Lawrence and Ottawa Railway Company sought amendment to its charter, this House had refused to legislate on the ground that the road was solely within the Province of Ontario, and in order to bring the subject within the jurisdiction of Parliament, a clause had been inserted authorizing the company to cross the River Ottawa into the Province of Quebec.

Sir Geo. Cartier took exception to the doctrine that had been laid down by the hon. member for Bothwell with regard to the power of local Legislatures to apply the surplus revenue to purposes which it might consider to be of public interest to the Province. The hon. member had denied the right of the Local Legislature to appropriate any of the provincial income or impose any taxation in order to aid an undertaking which was not for the public good and for the use of the State. In laying down that proposition he had applied it to the case of the Dominion Government in granting aid for the improvement of certain harbours. He (Sir George) would refer the hon. gentleman to the 126th clause of the British North America Act, which gave the Local Legislature power to appropriate the surplus revenue to any purpose which it might designe to be for the public service of the Province. The Legislature were the sole judges as to whether the work to be aided was a public work useful to the Province, or not. With regard to the bill before the House, if the hon. gentleman who had it in charge were to go into Committee would have the right to legislate in the direction asked, since it had jurisdiction with regard to Boards and matters of that kind. It did not follow that the action of Parliament would disturb the session of the court for the bondholder might be legalised without affecting their judgment in any way. He (Sir George) was glad when constitutional questions of this kind arose to have them thoroughly discussed and cast aside.

The Pacific Railway.

It will be seen by reference to the debate over the Eastern terminus of the Pacific Railway that the Government intend fixing it in reality on the North side of Lake Nipissing with a branch towards the East and South, making the difference in distance against Ontario of over sixty miles.

The plea is that the Company must be consulted, while the Dominion furnishes the means. The road is intended to meet the commercial necessities of the country, and should be located to that end. Ontario is the largest and most populous; and her trade is greatly in excess of any of the other provinces, and yet the terminus of this great national highway cannot be placed to suit her interests.

During the debate in the House on the 28th, Sir G. Cartier moved that the House go into committee on the Bill forthwith.

Hon. Mr. Mackenzie said it was not his intention to discuss this question at the present stage, provided that a certain understanding was agreed to by the Government with regard to the reception of the report of the committee of the whole. As the Bill stood [illegible] the greatest possible objection to it; and it was the intention of the Opposition to move amendments in the direction which they believed absolutely essential for the protection of the public interests. He did not think it desirable or necessary that the Bill should be discussed at this stage. He thought the most convenient time for a thorough discussion, such as the importance of the interests involved demanded, was upon the reception of the report of the Committee of the whole, if the Govern ment would agree not to move the reception of the report to-day.

Sir G. E. Cartier expressed the thanks of the Government for the course taken by the Opposition. The Government did not propose to take the occurrence until Friday next.

The House then went into Committee on the Bill, Mr. Hurdon in the chair.

Sir G. E. Cartier moved an amendment to make it clear that the Eastern terminus of the road would be near Lake Nipissing and on the south thereof.

Hon. Mr. Blake asked if this amendment would provide that the line would run between the Georgian Bay and Lake Nipissing, or on the other side of the lake.

Sir G. E. Cartier said the Government could not say positively where the east

Sir A. T. Galt was not far wrong in his estimate of the consequences of the treaty. The population of Canada is very different now from what it was some years ago, and this difference is rapidly increasing with each succeeding generation of the people. When a considerable portion of our population consisted of heads of families born in Britain, the natural love of country kept up the feeling of loyalty to their native land; but their children know nothing of Britain, and their grand children still less—they are native-born Canadians—Americans, not Britons, in their home—all their interests and ties of relationship are American,—they never think of taking a trip to the "old country", but they often "go over to the States." Every succeeding generation of our population is becoming more American and less British, by what Darwin would call the process of natural selection and preservation of the fittest. Emigration cannot keep this natural tendency in check, and Sir A. T. Galt probably sees further through the mill-stone of the future than most of his contemporaries, when he supports the Washington treaty on the ground that it is a great step towards annexation.

One prominent characteristic of the debate, and which cropped out more or less in the remarks of every speaker, was the heart-felt conviction that the ratification of the Treaty of Washington by our Parliament was a sacrifice of Canada to the interests of the Empire; and this feeling pervades the great mass of the people. Even Sir John himself was forced to acknowledge that he supported the treaty against his will.

The only hope for Canada now lies in the prospect that the difficulty in regard to the question of consequential damages may cause the break-up of the negotiations and abandonment of the treaty.—There is no danger of war resulting—both England and the United States have more sense than to go to war about consequential damages—and the matter may be safely allowed to lie in abeyance for a few years. As the two countries grow older they will grow wiser—or at least they ought to—and when negotiations are again opened for the settlement of the matters in dispute, a more permanent and satisfactory result will be arrived at.

Our Canadian Parliament, however, should not have ratified the treaty.—Canada first, and the Empire afterwards, should be the motto of every true-hearted Canadian.

The Washington Treaty in the Senate.

Senator Campbell moved the second reading of the Bill to give effect to the Washington Treaty.

Senator De St. Just said that every Canadian was willing to make sacrifices in the interests of the Empire; but our fisheries had nothing to do with the main question, and could have been settled without being mixed up with Imperial matters. In the Johnson-Clarendon Treaty, Canadian affairs were not included at all. We were not then asked to give up our Fisheries and the navigation of the St. Lawrence to secure the ratification of that Treaty. He admitted that, when the Premier separated himself from his colleagues, he became an Imperial Commissioner; but at the same time his Government could not divest themselves of the responsibility of his acts. No doubt sacrifices had been made in the interests of peace, as in case of the Ashburton and other treaties, in which the Americans had made demands for things which did not belong to them. Time and again our rights had been sacrificed to Imperial interests. As a British subject he did not deny that we should be prepared to make such sacrifices, if necessary; but he contended in this last case it was not necessary. There was no reason why our real claims should have been abandoned without even discussion on the subject. We had been asked to surrender our fisheries for a paltry consideration of being allowed to sell our fish and fish oil in the American market. No doubt the vote in the other House was an indication to some extent of the feeling of the country; but, if the motives of the members could be seen, it would be found some members for maritime constituencies were influenced by sectional interests. When an offer of reciprocity to a certain extent had been made by the Americans, the British Commissioners had declined it; yet afterwards they accepted an offer less liberal; and he believed, if we had continued the policy pursued before this treaty was negotiated, and had not allowed our interests to be mixed up with Imperial questions, we might have eventually continued the renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty. No doubt we were British subjects, but we were also Canadians, and in dealing with the United States we should look to the peculiar position we occupy towards them. Not as part of the Empire, but as the Dominion, yet to be an independent power. Looking at the tone of the British press, the day might be expected to come when we should be called upon to assume an independent position. We could not remain as we were for ever. With our vast extent of territory and immense resources, we must inevitably become a nation. The time might be hastened by events between Great Britain and the United States. It might, five years hence, be found that we were a source of weakness to the Empire, and we would be called upon to become an independent nation, and what then would we have to offer to secure liberal commercial relations with the United States? Nothing. With our Fisheries and the navigation of the St Lawrence surrendered, we had little remaining to offer. The Treaty might be favourable to Nova Scotia, but it was not to any other Province in the Dominion. He Would not ask the House to divide on this question, but he hoped the hon members would give expression to their views in opposition to the Treaty. He referred to former treaties, pointing out the valuable rights of this country ceded to the capacity of the Americans. In the Treaty of 1871. we gave up our fisheries at the navigation of the St. Lawrence. If any one imagined that the Treaty did give the Americans the use of our Canal, let him fancy what would be the result of excluding them from them They would immediately demand a new Treaty from Great Britain giving them the use of our canals. Great Britain might refuse to make the concession at first, but eventually, as in the case of, the Ashburton and other Treaties, their demand would be acceded to. For these considerations and others he regretted our interests sacrificed. He regretted it because he sidered the sacrifice unnecessary.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL

Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six of some of the best. Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation, of this Oil a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Wherever applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alcbol is lost in that way, and you get only the smell of Oils which they may contain.

NEW DOMINION MONTHLY.
PROSPECTUS FOR 1872.

This magazine is the oldest and has the largest circulation of any literary magazine in Canada. It aims at being a Canadian Magazine, both in the character of its matter, and in adopting the way for Canadian writers. In the latter field it has up to the present been a failure. So far as remunerating its contributors and its publishers is concerned; but as its circulation is fair, we are in hopes that a good advertising patronage may yet put it on paying basis. We do not our Canadian homes can find elsewhere, so interesting and so Canadian, and we ask all Canadians to sustain it. PAIN KILLER

Wife to Husband—(Rubbing the PAIN-KILLER on his Rheumatic shoulder briskly.) Its a great pity such a good medicine as Perry Davis' PAIN-KILLER is not more extensively used, just see what a world of good it has done ever since we have had it, George don't have the toothache any more, it has saved Fredy a severe attack of Dyspepsia; and I know it will relieve you of Rheumatism.

Husband:—You are right Mary, the PAIN-KILLER seems to fire up the cold corners of my shoulder and put new life into it, it certainly does act instantaneously, I do think my dear, I am cured already (meditatingly) well, well, all I have heard said of it is true, my shoulder is free from pain the first time for these two months.

Wife:—It is strange, we never have been induced to try it before, I should have thought you would have been often advised to try it.

Husband:—I have had the PAIN-KILLER recommended many times, but between the Doctors and Druggists they have always succeeded in keeping me from using it by suggesting other trash that has done me, no good.

Wife:—People seem to enjoy paying the Doctor five or ten Dollars every now and then to experiment on them, when a twenty five cent bottle of PAIN-KILLER would give them far more relief, and the Druggists are so obliging it is very hard to say "I want Perry Davis' PAIN-KILLER and nothing else will do," and thus refuse to buy their trash.

Sold every where, price 25 cts. and 50 cts. per bottle.

THERE IS NO DISEASED CONDITION OF THE BODY, in which DR. WHEELER'S Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya may not be used with positive benefit. Being a Chemical Food and Nutritive Tonic, it acts physiologically in the same manner as our diet. It perfects digestion, assimilation, and the formation of healthy blood. It sustains the vital forces by supplying the waste constantly going on, of nerve and muscle, as the result of mental and physical exertion, enabling mind and body to undergo great labor without fatigue. In action it building up constitutions broken down with Wasting Chronic Diseases, by fast living and bad habits, is truly extraordinary, its effect being immediate in energizing all the organs of the body. Phosphates being absolutely essential to cell formation and the growth of tissues, must for all time be Nature's great restorative and vitalizer.

Sold by all Druggists, at $1. 12-1y.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

Probably never before in the whole history of medicine, has anything won so widely and so deeply upon the confidence of mankind, as this excellent remedy for pulmonary complaints. Through a long series of years, and among most of the races of men it has risen higher and higher in their estimation, as it has become better known. Its uniform character and power to cure the various affections of the lungs and throat, have made it known as a reliable protector against them. While adapted to milder forms of disease and to young children, it is at the same time the most effectual remedy that can be given for incipient consumption, and the dangerous affections of the throat and lungs. As a provision against sudden attacks of Croup, it should be kept on hand in every family, and indeed as all are sometimes subject to colds and coughs, all should be provided with this antidote for them.

Although settled Consumption is thought incurable, still great numbers of cases where the disease was considered settled, have been completely cured, and the patient restored to sound health by the Cherry Pectoral. So complete is its mastery over the disorders of the Lungs and Throat, that the most obstinate of them yield to it. When nothing else could reach them, under the Cherry Pectoral they subside and disappear.

Singers and Public Speakers find great protection from it.

Asthma is always relieved and often wholly cured by it.

Bronchitis is generally cured by taking the Cherry Pectoral in small and frequent doses.

So generally are its virtues known that we need not publish the certificates of them here, or do more than assure the public that its qualities are fully maintained.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

For Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons.

As its name implies, it does Cure, and does not fail. Containing neither Arsenic, Quinine, Mercury, Zinc, nor any other mineral or poisonous substance whatever, it in no sense injures any patient. The number and intermittence of its cures in the agueridden districts, are literally beyond a parallel, and we believe without a parallel in the history of Ague medicines. Our pride is gratified by the acknowledgments we receive of the radical cures effected in obstinate cases, and where other remedies had wholly failed.

Travellers and persons, either residing in, or travelling through miasmatic localities, will be protected by taking the Ague Cure daily.

For Liver Complaints, arising from torpidity of the Liver, it is an excellent remedy, stimulating the Liver into healthy activity.

For Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints, it is an excellent remedy, producing in many truly remarkable cures, where other medicines had failed.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & Co., Practical & Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass., and sold by druggists the world.

PRICE $1.00 PER BOTTLE.

How to Get Rich.

Put on the skin of an eight hoyed fiste
If your'r only a penny whistle;
Pass where you can for a garden rose,
If you're only a wayside thistle.

Blow, wherever you blow your horn,
So people can understand
That you may be sharp, but you won't be fat
In society's great brass band.

Pass the plate or hat in church
With the usual sabbath air;
But move with a mild religious squeak,
That people may know you're there.

If you carry a nose six inches long,
(And a beak can scarce be longer)
Believe it a sign of perceptive strong,
And the longer it is the stronger.

Set it in the order of nasal tubes.
Your organ is brief in measure,
Then, brevity being the soul of wit,
Consider your pug a treasure.

Love your neighbor—but mark the force
Of the Gospel rule of grace—
The more you admire yourself, my friend,
The higher your neighbor's place.

Clink your dime in the deacon's pan.
As if you were throwing gold,
And give with an eye to the business hope
Of reaping a hundred fold.

Whether your reading is trite or great,
Quote right, or never quote;
Polish your uppers, though down at heel,
And never endorse a note.

Always advance best hand, best foot,
(Best hand, best foot, your own),
And thus you may tread on the fat of the land
While the others enjoy the bone.

Agricultural.

Greenhorns.

The country lad, before he is sent up "to town" to commence his career there, is warned of the dangers which will best him upon every hand. The parson exhorts him in touching platitudes—which are none the less impressing because they are platitudes—to keep in the straight path, to go to church twice every Sunday, to be regular in his attendance at Sunday school and Bible class, and to avoid the society of ungodly men and women. Father and mother entreat him to keep steady, to work hard, and, above all, to write home very, very often to tell them how he is getting on, and assure him that, if he does this, he will not fail to rise in the world. In addition to all this, his determination to keep in the straight path is strengthened by a number of disinterested people, who forward him a small library, illustrating and setting forth the miserable future that is in store for those who are guilty of ever the most trifling peccadilloes—books which imply that if an unhappy youth, in one single instance, gives way to temptation, his descent down the declivity of ruin and misery is rapid, and his ultimate destruction certain. Fortified by all these counsels the wanderer starts forth, feeling fully convinced that, come what may, he will resist every temptation that the Evil One places in his path. And in this spirit he commences his career in the place of his adoption. But he does not continue very long in the same mind, and, as time goes on, the good counsel of the parson, the tender advice of his father and mother, and the admonitions of the stirring books, are all alike ignored. The people, into whose company he is thrown, soon induce him to take different views of things. They laugh at him for his awkwardness and his peculiar opinions, as they dub them. They inform him that he must put an end to all that sort of thing now he has taken up his residence in civilized parts. He cannot stand their ridicule, and so he ultimately quietly places himself under their guidance Then they commence his education. They introduce him to music halls and casinos, to bar-parlors and billiard saloons, and he quietly submits to do just what he is told ought to. In order to stand well in their eyes, he even goes a few steps further than they do, and indulges in excesses from which they shrink back as from something dangerous. Of course they applaud and call him a jolly good fellow, but for all that, they do not cease to patronize. He is the victim of numerous practical jokes and the object o constant ridicule. His inexperience constantly displays itself, and induces him to do things which bring down upon him the laughter of his companions. These acts are not in the vast majority of instances, foolish in themselves, but are so regarded from the standpoint of those who think themselves cleverer than he is. For instance, he often evidences a faith in human nature which is positively startling He does not relish the witty sallies of his friends when they are directed against himself, and so imitates his companions in every particular. Very soon he raises himself to drink as much, swear as much, bet as much, and talk as noisy as they can He plunges headlong, very often, into a life of thoughtless and coarse dissipation, and at last comes out of the ordeal a fullfledged cad, and debilitated man of the world. He is as a rule, only too well supplied with money by his friends at home, who shrink back from the idea that their boy should not be in a position to hold his own with his town associates. Then his freedom is unlimited, for there is no check whatever upon him. Besides this, he is entirely thrown upon his own resources for amusement. So there is somewhere perhaps, for his developing into the disagreeable being which he sometimes does.

It is somewhat astonishing that he, who has passed through all three transitory stages, should, of all people in the world, be the most determined and merciless tormentor of the greenhorns who come from the country up to town. But so it is. He is the most contemptuously sarcastic at the various exhibitions of innocence and awkwardness displayed by rustic youths. To hear him talk one would imagine that he had never been in the country, but that he had been born and bred in a realm of casinos and billiard saloons. He does not pretend to know anything about a country life, except that it is intolerably slow—so slow indeed that it is a matter of surprise to him how anybody can manage to endure it. He has no patience with the unfortunate youngster who betrays any symptoms of home sickness, or an inclination to adhere to the old habits which have become almost second nature. If the youngster desires to be held in good estimation, he must, however great the wrench may be, discard those old habits and contract new ones, against which his better nature revolts. The force of example is strong, and he does this. He proceeds to extend his knowledge, cheered on and encouraged by those who once in their lives stood in a position similar to that which he occupies. It must be noted that this extension of knowledge is simply a knowledge of the manners and customs and mysteries of a disreputable and dangerous portion of the community. It is not knowledge in the ordinary meaning of the word. Tis no credit to know anything of theology, metaphysics, political economy, or even the history of one's own country, for to be well up in these matters, and to let it be known that such is the case, is simply to acknowledge one's self a namby-pamby book-worm. There are a great many who do profess this, but they are regarded with dislike an affected contempt by the class under notice

A good many of these fussy-developed greenhorns get into trouble, and perhaps the primary cause of this is that they fancy they know a great deal more than they really do. What other people do, they imagine they can—if one man can afford to throw away a sovereign, so can they though they have to borrow the sovereign before they spend it. And this very weakness makes them susceptible to plunder to an almost unlimited extent. Besides when they get into water beyond their depth, there is no one by to lend them a hand to draw them out. There they must flounder as best they can, and if they do not possess sufficient vitality to swim, they must sink. Those whose company they keep are simply friends so long as they have money to spend.—Liberal Review.

Spring House Cleaning.

SOME VALUABLE SUGGESTIONS ON THE SUBJECT—A BATCH OF USEFUL RECIPES.

Now comes the season of general cleaning, when all the corners and closets are overturned and hidden things are brought to light. Early in the month, before the spathmillers show themselves, all the woolen sheets etc., are to be washed, and the extra ones packed carefully away in deep chests, and cedar boughs strewn over them, or camphor gum. If you possess a camphor wood trunk you can defy the moths, but without that convenience, special heed must be paid to their din likes, or you may have your blankets destroyed.

Carpets that do not require to be taken up should be loosened at the edges, and with a dustpan and brush, all the dust can be removed; if there are any traces of moths wash the floor with spirits of turpentine or benzine, put the carpet down quickly, and the moths will have their quietus. The disagreeable odor will soon disappear, if the windows are opened widely, and you can be certain that your carpets will not be ruined this summer. This same burning fluid will drive out and keep away moths from upholstered furniture. It can be put on with a cloth, and if pure will leave no stain, but brighten the colors. Before applying it brush out the cushions with a hand brush and a damp cloth to remove all the dust. Straw matting should be washed with a cloth dampened with salt water. Take care to wet it but little, for if the matting is soaked through it becomes brittle. If Indian meal is sprinkled over it, or damp sand and then thoroughly swept out, it will also cleanse it finely.

Dry whiting will polish the glass panes nicely, and we find weak black tea, with some alcohol, the best liquid to wash the glasses. For a few days before the cleansing takes place, save all the tea grounds, then when needed, boil them in a tin pail with two quarts of water, and use the liquid on the windows. It takes off all dust and fly specks. If applied with a newspaper, and rubbed off with another paper they look far better than if cloth is used.

Scald your bedsteads in the hottest soapsuds you can apply; if there are traces of bugs apply kerosene, with a small paint brush. It is a sure cure. Tenant's of city houses are often annoyed by bugs, and cannot tell whence they come. Perhaps the border of the wall paper might divulge their courses, or the cornices of the windows disclose their aunts. Again apply kerosene, and they will no longer trouble you. Carbolic acid may be applied; if pure the odor is not as disagreeable as that of coal oil.

Papering and painting are best done in cold weather, especially the latter; for the wood absorbs the oil of the paint much more than in warm weather it hardens on the outside, making a coat which will protect the wood instead of soaking into it.

In papering will be sure to remove all the old paper and paste, and scrape them perfectly smooth. Dampen the old paper with cloths wet in saleratus water, and it will come off easily; fill up the cracks with plaster of Paris, and if there are any traces of bugs wash the wall all over with a weak solution of carbolic acid and water; this will purify the air and destroy all mold and vermin. The best paste is made out of rye flour, with two ounces of glue dissolved in each quart of paste half an ounce of powdered borax will make it better. People now generally understand how dangerous it is to paper a wall over old paper and paste. Many deaths have occured from this cause; the air of many sleeping rooms has been thus poisoned. In some old houses three or four layers of paper have been found upon the walls of the rooms, and their inmates have died, and no doctor could tell whence came the disease.

In whitewashing, a pound of glue dissolved in hot water and diluted with four gallons of cold water, to which is added six pounds of whiting, will be found to answer a better purpose than common lime. Woodwork can be washed with this glue size, and one coat of paint on it would last for years. A little chrome yellow will give a light lemon colored tint to the wash.

Grease can be extracted from cloths by applying a paste of wood ashes and quick lime, to be kept on for several days and then washed off.

Ink stains on wood can be removed by a solution of oxalic acid. Cover the spots with bits of the acid, turn on a spoonful of water and place a heated flat iron over it; when the hissing ceases the ink will have disappeared.

Kerosene and powdered lime whiting or wood ashes, will scour tin with the least labor. Kerosene and whiting will also cleanse silverware, door knobs, hinges, etc. Wet the flannel slightly in oil, dip in the whiting, then rub with dry paper. Spots can be taken out of marble with finely powdered pumice-stone. Mix it with verjuice, cover the spots with it, and let it remain for twelve hours; then rub clean with a damp sponge, rinse with clean water and wipe dry with a cloth. If gilt or varnished with copal varnish, they can be washed with cold water without injury. Lace curtains should never be ironed. Wash and starch them, using in the rinsing water a table-spoonful of powdered borax. This makes them very stiff. When wet spread on a wet sheet, either on the floor or bed, and pin down every two or three inches. Let them dry for several days and they look very nice.

The Winter of The Heart.

Let it never come to you. Live so that good angels may protect you from that terrible evil—the winter of the heart. Let no chilling influence freeze up the fountains of sympathy and happiness in its depths; no cold burden settle over its withered hopes, like snow on the faded flowers; no rude blasts of discontentedness moan and shriek through its desolate chambers.

Your Life-path may lead you among trials which, for a time, seem utterly to impede your progress, and shut out the very light of heaven from your anxious gaze. Poverty may take the place of ease and plenty; your luxurious home may be exchanged for a single lowly room—the soft couch for the pallet of straw—the rich viands for the coarse food of the poor. Summer friends may forsake you, with scarcely a passing look or word of compassion. You may be forced to toil wearily, steadily on, to earn a livelihood; you may encounter fraud and the base avarice which would extort the last farthing, till you well-nigh turn in disgust from your fellow beings.

Death may sever the dear ties that bind you to the earth, and leave you in fearful darkness. That noble, manly boy, the sole hope of your declining years, may be taken from you while your spirit clings to him with a wild tenacity, which even the shadows of the tomb cannot wholly subdue. But still look upward—put faith in Providence and the winter of the heart will not come to you.

Curiosities.

A man at Chippewa Falls, Wis., shave himself standing on one foot. A man's a very good thing to stand on.

The Indians have a curious way of they talk. You never saw a polite man that did not wear high heeled boots and a high crowned hat, the latter often sitting on about three hairs of his head.

"What can be more harrowing to your soul than the thought of wasted opportunities?" asked a member of a bright boy. "A peg in my boot harrows my sole more than anything else" replied the bright boy.

"What do I think o' Lennox, ask ye?" said old John Wilson, a Stirling worthy, on being asked his opinion of the great metropolis—"what do I think o't? It is just a lump o' gude ground spoilt wi' stanes and lime."

A lady tells us that when she was a poor little girl, living in the country, she used to "plant potatoes in her bare feet." This suggests a new idea of those troublesome things on our tons.

A lady correspondent writing on earthquakes says that "heterogeneous paradoxes pantastically converging are not due to the delicious intervention of photospherical asterokils, but rather to parabolic stratification of igneous erganas."

The following is the direction on the envelope of a letter received by a black-smith at Derby Ind. a few days ago:

To Wm Harding, the pagrosed scrub,
Whose wife is named Hannaan.
He is pounding iron for his grub,
In Derby, Indiana.

A young lady being asked by a rich old bachelor, "If not yourself, who would you rather be?" blushed as she sweetly replied "Yours truly."

A witness being interrogated as to whether the defendant in the case was drunk, replied—"Well I can't exactly say that, but I saw him sitting in the middle of the floor, making making grabs in the air, and say that he'd be wipped if he didn't catch the bed the next time it ran round him."

A young lady entered one of our drug stores a few days since, and asked for a bottle of "Jane's Experience." The clerk informed her that Jane had not bottled her experience yet, but they could furnish "Jayne's Expectorant."

A Chinese thus describes a trial in the English law courts:—"One man is quite silent, another talks all the time and twelve wise men condemn the man who has not said a word."

Janesville, Wis., girls go to the opera bonnet and rastel upon sitting on the railing and hanging their feet over. One man in the parquette had a narrow escape from being crushed to atoms the other night, by one of the young ladies dropping her shoes on him.

Two Jews were distinguished, one for his skill in pugilism, the other for fondness of the fair sex. A gentleman on being asked to what tribe they belonged answered, "I don't know, had they not been Jews, I should have supposed one of them to be an Amorite, and the other a Hittite."

An Illinois editor thus sensationally speaks of the marriage of a professional brother in Indiana.—"He steps upon the pyramidal platform, adjusted the fatal noose and was swung off into that unsilent bourne whence he can never return, save by the Indianapolis connecting lines."

The witty and convivial Lord Kelly, being in his early years much addicted to dissipation, his mother advised him to take example of a gentleman whose constant food was herbs, and his drink water. "What madame," said he, "would you have me imitate a man who eats like a beast, and drinks like a fish?"

A city fop was looking at a farm he thought of purchasing, the owner mentioned as an additional inducement to him to buy, that the farm has a very cold spring on it. 'Ah, aw," said the fop, "I won't take it then' fo.' I have heard that a cold spring ruined the crops last year, and I don't want a place with such a drawback upon it."

A new fashioned bustle was found in the Cricket Field, London, consisting of several newspapers, three pair of old hose, two quilted petticoats (nearly worn out), two old slouch hats, a pair of top boots, a bunch of hay, a piece of stair carpet, and a cord about three feet long.

A Virginia City man thus describes his method of conjugal discipline:

"Whenever I see she's got her mad up, if it's a dozen times a day, I just quietly say nothing, but kinder humor her, and she comes round all right after a while Then when she throws things at me, or gives a wild slash for me with the broom or rolling pin, I just dodges a little and she hits me the third time before I get my eyes on her and then I know I can disappear in such action on her part. Perhaps I have to leave the house to show her this, but she sees the point, Then by being careful not to irritate her, and letting her have her own way, I manage to make her do as I please."

An Irishman took a contract to dig a well. When he had dug twenty five feet down, it caved in and filled nearly to the top. Pat looked cautiously around and seeing no person near, took off his hat and coat, hung them on a windlass crawled into some bushes and awaited events. In a short time the citizens discovered that the well had caved in and seeing Pat's hat and coat on the windlass, supposed he was at the bottom. A few hours of brisk digging cleared the loose earth from the well, and just as they reached the bottom, and were wondering where the body was, Pat walked out of the bushes, and gradually thanked them for relieving him of a sorry job. Some of the tired diggers were disgusted, but the joke was too good to allow anything more than a hearty laugh, which followed.

CARELESSNESS.—Many persons neglect their horses' health and condition until it is too late, when at a trifling expense and no trouble the horse might have been saved if attended to in time.—To all who may occasion to use an article of the kind we would confidently recommend, "Darley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy;" it is without doubt the best preparation in use, as thousands who have used it testify. Remember the name, and see that the signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package. Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle, Ont., proprietors for Canada. Sold by all medicine dealers.

WHAT IS BEST TO BE DONE.—If you are suffering from rheumatism, lame back, sprains, strains or bruises, sick headache, toothache, cholic, bowel complaints, burns, frost bites, &c., decidedly the best thing to get in a bottle of the "Canadian Pain Destroyer." The cost is trifling, and its effects certain. It is a never failing remedy, and no family should be without it. Sold by all medicine dealers.

Fellows Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites is an excellent nervous tonic. It exerts a direct influence on the nervous system, and through it it invigorates the body.

Fevers seldom make an attack without warning and may often be thrown off by soaking the feet in warm water, wrapping up warm in bed, and taking two or three of "Parsons Purgative Pills."

Do you ever think that what is termed a common cold, when systematically neglected, often leads to that most fatal and distressing disease—consumption—but when attended to in time is generally easy of cure. If you are troubled with a cold or cough, "Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers" will be found to be the most efficacious in removing it. They give immediate relief, and generally effect a cure when used in time. Sold by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cents per box.

A large volume would not contain the mass of testimony which has accumulated in favor of "Dr. Watson Balsam of Wild Cherry as a safe, efficient, and reliable remedy to cure any coughs, colds, and pulmonary disease. Many of the cures are truly wonderful.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the glossy and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, is derived from its cures many of which are truly marvellous. Inveterate cases of Scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were aggravated by the scrofulous contamination until they were painfully afflicting, have been radically cured in such great numbers by almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this unseen and unfelt tenant of the organism undermines the constitution, and invites the attacks of enfeebling or fatal diseases, without exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develops into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hence the accumulative use of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla is advisable, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following form of maladies generally find immediate relief, and, at length, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Fits, Epilepsy, Neuralgia and the various affections of the muscular and nervous systems.

Syphilis or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine but long continued use of this medicine will eradicate the complaint. Leucorrhœa or Whites, Uterine Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Ague and Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, caused by accumulations of extraneous matter in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaint, Torpidity, Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising in the system, from the rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Despondent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affection symptoms of Nervous Debility, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

Select Poetry.

Waiting for the Adoption.

Waiting amid the shadows
For the blushing of the dawn,
Waiting amid God darkness
For the sunlight of the morn,
Waiting, because it appointed up
Has not told out for years—
Waiting because a groaning earth
Has not wept all its tears.

Toil-worn toil very wearied,
For the toiling this is King—
Leaning upon the promise
For the Promiser is strong.
Waiting because some straying sheep
Are on the mountains still,
They must be sought, and found, and saved
It is the Father's will.

Waiting amid sorrow [illegible]
From many a mourning heart,
Child-like by the bitter night which
The lamp of faith burns low;
Waiting because a patient God
Is pitiful and kind—
The seeking Shepherd may not leave
One halting lamb behind.

Waiting amid angry billows,
For the breaking of the light—
Heartsick, and sad, and fruitful
With telling all the night!
Waiting because the Master stands
To watch the rising tide,
And He would have us cast the net
Upon the other side.

Waiting while skies still blacken
With storm-clouds hanging low,
Eyes fall with looking upward
To find the emerald bow.
Waiting because the Master's eye
Is on the ripening grain.
The impatient stable must be stayed
Waiting the "latter rain."

Waiting with hands still busy,
Chiding the tears that fall,
Stopping sometimes to listen,
Ready He should call.
Waiting because the mighty stream,
Flows on with ceaseless tide,
There's room within the palace halls,
The open door stands wide.

Beguiling waiting hours,
With rapturous thoughts of home,
Brushing a yearning whisper,
"When will the Master come?"

* * * *

Hark! get thee to the mountains,
There is sound of distant song.
The bridegroom king is coming,
For his bride has waited long!

Highland Distinctions.

"Have you had any good sport today, sir?" said the bellman to a gentleman with whom he [illegible] returning from fishing, the latter with the basket slung over his back.

"No, Archie, I can't say I have."

"Ay, I am vex'd for that; but did you not catch nothing?"

"Only a few small parr, and a tolerably fine grilse."

"A grilse, did you; it's bonny fish a grulse, feet is't; would you let me see it, sir? I like to see a grulse always."

"Most certainly—there it is."

"It's a bonny fish, and then I'll guess from my eye six pounds weight, a little more maybe if you were putting it on a weight to try; but I thocht you was knew better; it's no a grulse, it's a trout."

"A trout, is it? how do you know?"

"How I knew?—I ken in a moment."

"Yes, but how do you know."

"Weel, will you hearken till I was explain? You see, a grulse and a trout is of a perfect difference; its not the same fish at all, and if you was seen a trout and a grulse just before you there, you would say that fish in not the tother; but that's a trout, and tother is a grulse."

"Yes! yes! you can say that, Archie, but in what way can I to distinguish between the two?"

"Is it possible noo that you'll no understand! it's a trout, as I am telling you ay, an' it's no a trout, out o' the water down there, the Echock besides oursels neither, but a Mennon trout; teet is it."

"That's all very well, but tell me the color, form, or point, that I may know again, and how you knew that to be a Mennon trout?"

"Know't in a moment, many a tog dee sin' Archie was a whelp; the burn doon gaun by, you see, is a bigger burn nor the Meenon, and consequence the trouts are hotter made, thicker at the shoothers, more strapper to mak' their way through the water, as I would say, and I'll just try again to explain. I will made you know the difference, plain as if you was a fish yourself, and put your nose to your brither fish, as you will kindly see the creatures in the water when they are meeting wi them they ken; ay, more nor sum of our brithers and sisters will do among themsels, for all that's told them in the kirk, dout ay. I was going to explain to you the perfect difference that there is between a trout and a grulse. You see, if the two were laid down before you there this moment, you would observe, ay before just you would look again, and no body would need to tell you that they're not the same fish; you would say that a trout and a grulse would be here and there, if they happen to be put down, and you knew that's a trout, ay a trog's not a bit of a grulse about it."

"But, Archie, I am just as wise as I was, you have yet given me no idea whatever of the points in which the trout and grilse differ from each other."

"After that, now it's a perfect astonishment to me, that you'll not understand what I'll made so plain as the child's A B C to the school bubbie. What I'll say in a word to make you ken, I don't know! you see, for I want you to know, for it's importance to a gentleman like you that's often fish a grulse and trout belong to a different family, and their father per mother is not the same and their offspring cannna be the same, but just resemble their father and mother like enough—a perfect altogether different, never-possible to be mistake by any body that will know a trout; you see, I say again, there fine, that's a trout lying down, you'll say in a moment when you'll saw, well that's a trout, and you'll knew it; a grulse is a difference now, and you look at it too, because it's there, and though they just be awa' from one another, not far you'll just say yourself, they're not the same at all. Now you are satisfied that it's no possible to be the same, because they are, as I'm saying as perfect plain, not the same; if you'll not understand now, you are a stupid more nor I'll thocht, and I canna put words into your head."

Temperance and the Church

"At the recent anniversary meeting of the National Temperance Society, New York, the Rev. J. P. Newman, D.D., of Washington, Chaplain to the United States Senate, concluded what appears to have been a very telling speech as follows. It shows that temperance is gaining ground in high places.

"We wish to create an intelligent and permanent moral sentiment on two things; first, that intemperance is an evil, only evil, and always evil, whether in the form of moderate drinking or in the form of habitual drunkenness. We want to create an intelligent permanent moral sentiment that civil law should be on the side of this grand cause. Where and how shall this moral sentiment be created? I trust Mr Chairman, that I shall not be regarded as heterodox, or as exclusive in my sentiments or expressions, if I say that the power to create this moral sentiment is in the Christian church of this country. The controling elements of society are in the Christian church. They control the educational thought of this land. The literary institutions are under the control of the Christian church. The church controls the families that compose our great nation. The church controls the wealth not only of this city but of all the great cities of this country. The church controls the fashion of our country; and indeed, we can scarcely think of anything that is potent in society, tending to give direction to thought, to fashion, and public sentiment, which is not in the Christian church. But I hold, Mr. Chairman that the church to-night is not right that she has never been right, and that she has not moved up to the high standard of total abstinence as placed before us in God's holy word, and held up before us by this Society.—(Applause.)

What the church needs is three things: first, a clear and distinct enunciation of the principles of total abstinence, and no church is worthy to be a church that has not a pledge of total abstinence as a condition of church membership. Norman is fit to be a member of a Christian church who is not a total abstinence man, nor is any man fit to be a member of a Christian church who will say his prayers on God's holy day, and six days in the week will let out his property to rumsellers.—(Loud applause.)

The second thing that we want is [illegible] ing persons who at bridal parties, on New Year's day, and around the festive board, will deal out the sparkling wine and the exciting champagne, a discipline that will bring them to the bar of the church.—(Applause.)

Thirdly, we need the power that shall grow out of an example which will be in harmony with the very genius of Christianity, with the teachings of the Gospel, and with the well-being of society.

The responsibility of the oscillations and fluctuations of the temperance cause, now up and then down, in with the clergy and out with members of Christian church in this country. Rarely do you hear the trumpet with no uncertain sound on this subject in the pulpit. We, as a church, require our ministers to preach once a year on temperance, whereas, we should make it one of the cardinal objects of our discourse, and monthly, if necessary, thunder out against the terrible evil. While clergymen will spend Sabbath after Sabbath talking about Noah's ark, or Jonah in the whale's belly, or Daniel in the lion's den, the young men who gather around their altars are learning to be drunkards, and the very girls of beauty that gather around those same altars are teaching young men how to drink and how to be lost, and the deacons and the elders, the fathers and mothers who sit in the pews under the ministry of such men, are giving sanction to the evil of inebriety by passing the social glass at the dinner table and the festive board. I tell you, Christian men and women, the awful responsibility comes here. And when bishops and clergy shall arouse and stand firmly for the grand truth, there will be no fluctuation and this cause shall advance and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

Mr. Chairman, I must not detain you longer, but in conclusion let me assure you that we have tried this question in Washington, and it has been a grand success. There is a faithful clergy month after month preach to their people, whether private citizens or officials the grand doctrine of temperance, and in every church there is a juvenile missionary society, holding their meetings once a month. The churches there are putting forth such power that Washington has been transformed, and it is my happiness to say that, as a grand result there never were so many officials in Washington, total abstinence men, as to-night.—(Applause.

We lost two drunkards and two senators, and we got two temperance men and two Methodists.—(Laughter and applause.)

There never were so many temperance men in the House of Representatives as to-day. Why, sir, at any time you can call for a score of men in the Senate to make temperance speeches—Colfax, Wilson, Bo'ringham, Logan, Harlan, and others. It is my happiness to know that a year ago last New Year's we had a temperance New Year's day in Washington. The members of the Cabinet did not pass the social cup to any guest, and others followed their example—for when the king bows down, the courtiers appear. And let me say, Mr. Chairman, from personal knowledge to attribute that temperance New Year's day to an expressed wish emanating from the White House.—National Temperance Advocate.

The Science of Health will aim to disseminate throughout the world a knowledge of hygienic principles. It will not be the organ of any person, business, or institution, but an earnest teacher of the Laws of Life and Health.

The Science of Health will be the exponent of all known means by which Health, Strength Happiness and Long Life may be obtained, by using and regulating those agencies vitally related to Health and the treatment of Disease including Air, Light, Temperature, Bathing, Diet, Clothing, Exercise, Rest, Sleep, and all normal agents and hygienic materials.

The Peterborough Examiner

PETERBOROUGH, JUNE 6TH, 1872.

Editorial Items.

Mr. McFarlane, MP for Perth died at Ottawa on Saturday.

James Gordon, editor and proprietor of the New York Herald is dead.

Wool brought 50 cents a lb. last week in Oshawa, and from 50 cents to 55 cents in Toronto.

The Fire Brigade will muster at the Engine House at 7 o'clock, sharp, this evening, for practice, after which the regular monthly meeting will be held. A large attendance is requested.

Lacrosse Match—A game of Lacrosse will be played on the Cricket Ground, Ashburnham, to-day, between the Peterboro and Millbrook Lacrosse Clubs. The game to commence at 2.30 p.m. The Peterboro Club deserves great credit for accepting a challenge from such a "crack" club as Millbrook. They have our best wishes, and we hope they may be successful in this their first match with any foreign club.

Valuable Lot for Sale—Mr. McNeil will sell that valuable Corner Lot belonging to Mrs. Toban, on the corner of Hunter and Aylmer street, on the 12th instant, at one o'clock. There is 89 feet frontage on Hunter street and 62 feet on Aylmer.

We would remind our subscribers of the sale of Building Lots in front of Judge Dennistoun's residence, at 4 p.m. on Friday (to-morrow). The lots are finely situated and offer many inducements to investors, as the property in that locality is rapidly improving.

The Mail and Leader are endeavouring to make political capital out of the part taken by the Globe in reference to Trades Unions. The best answer that can be given to such parties is, pay as the Globe does, by the piece or by the hour, and then the workman can make his day long or short at pleasure. The folly of 'strikes' is exemplified at Hamilton, where large numbers of those who took part in the 'strike' have resumed work on the terms of the employers.

Mr. Costigan's Bill to prevent Messrs. McKenzie and Blake from running for the Commons unless they resigned their seats in the Local House, has passed its third reading. Mr. Blake, however, told them after its passage, that owing to the clumsiness of the wording it did not affect Ontario at all, so that John A with all his cunning is not shrewd enough to draw up a Bill that will prevent them running without resigning should they so will it.

In the House of Commons on Tuesday, Mr. Crawford, (Conservative) President of the Royal Canadian Bank, gave the most pointed denial to the statements that Mr. Blake's firm had been appointed Solicitors to the Royal Canadian Bank because of favor shown to that Institution Saying that it was during the last Ministry that the Bank had concluded to employ Mr. Blake's firm on the death of their solicitor.

Mr. Erskine, at the Glasgow Warehouse, advertises the receipt of a lot of damaged Damask Table Cloths, and other goods. Give him a call.

Mowry and Forsyth, Ashburnham, have a number of their celebrated threshing machines, now ready. See their advertisement.

McDonald and Elder are adding to their already large stock of Dry Goods and are now offering to sell low to suit the times. Read their advertisement.

Peterboro Woolen Mills—We invite special attention to the advertisement of above Mills. They are prepared to manufacture every class of work. Their custom department is complete. Mr. Brodie who is long and favorably known in Peterboro, gives particular attention to the management of the Mills, and will, no doubt give satisfaction to all who may patronize him.

New Dominion Monthly—We have received the June number of this deservedly popular periodical. All the works issued by John Dougall and Son deserve extensive circulation, and none more so than the "New Dominion Monthly." It is only $1.50 a year. The June number is a good one.

The Science of Health.—The first number of this new Health Journal is published. It is devoted to an exposition of all those agencies so vitally related to Health and to the treatment of disease, such as air, light, temperature, diet, clothing, bathing, exercise, sleep, electricity, and all normal agents and hygienic materials. It is an independent journal, published in the interests of the people which is certainly a strong commendation. This first number contains many articles of general interest. The cause and cure of Backache, the proper position on Horse-back, Water treatment of Fevers, Sprains and bruises, Pneumonia, Clergyman's sore throat, Chronic Catarrh, How to sleep, etc. The department of Talks with Correspondents contains valuable information. The new magazine is issued from the office of "The Phrenological Journal," and published at the low price of $2 a year, or 20 cents a number. Try it, and save many times its cost in doctor's bills. Address the publisher, S. R. Wells, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

Lock Master—Mr John Hopper has received the appointment of Lock Master for the Locks at the South of the Rice Lake. Locks at Bobcaygeon are all right again.

Law Examinations—We notice with pleasure the successful examination, for the fourth year, of Mr. C. Peters, of this town, and Mr. R. W. Donkhtown of Lindsay.

The British Government has determined to pardon the Fenians now remaining in prison, and they will shortly be released from custody.

The Band of the Grenadier Guards will leave England for America to-day, by the "City of Brussels," by order of the Queen and Commander in Chief, to take part in the Boston Jubilee.

The taking of the census last year cost the country $410,000, nearly half a million dollars.

On Monday the 27th ult., a flash of lightening struck the English Church in Whitby, knocked down the steeple, broke every window, destroyed the organ and left the interior of the church a perfect wreck.

Mr. Fairbairn invites a meeting of his Political Friends, to be held in Hill's Assembly Room, corner of Hunter and George streets, on Tuesday, 11th June, 1872, at 8 o'clock.

The Reformers of South Ontario hold a convention to-day to nominate a candidate to oppose T. N. Gibbs, the pliant tool of John A. Macdonald during the last five years. The friends of good government are confident of success at this election.

Personal—We are pleased to learn that Mr. Alexander Haggart, who was lately a teacher in Smith, has received the degree of B.A. at the close of his College course at the Victoria University. He was also "silver medalist" showing that he is not an unworthy recipient of the honor conferred on him.

Mr. John Moore has also had the degree of M.A. conferred on him.

Mr. T. J. Edmison received the second Brethour Prize in Theology.

These are all from Peterboro, and they afford satisfactory evidence that the young men of the county are no dishonor to it.

Also at the recent examinations for L.R.B.P., at the Royal College of Surgeons, Edingburgh, Dr. John Fraser of Shobane, and Dr. Frederick C. Claxton of Peterboro, Graduates in Medicine, of Victoria College, passed successfully.

The good people of Verulam would do well to consider what they are doing in voting $25,000 to the Bowmanville road. The Cobourg road will be built to Bobcaygeon, and then they will have a more direct route to the eastern market, and as direct to the west. The defeat of the By-laws in Manvers and Emily render the Bowmanville scheme very uncertain and to have a debt of $25,000 over the people will militate against granting to a deserving road. They should therefore hesitate before voting yea.

Found Drowned.—The body of the man Rafferty, lately supposed to have fallen into the race of the Otonabee Mills was found on Saturday in the Otonabee river about 8 miles down, near Mr. R. Goodfellow's, by Mr. Brownscombe. Dr. Kinoaid was notified and held an inquest the body was identified by two witnesses and a verdict of "found drowned" was returned. We are informed that although the body had been in the water eight days the smell of whisky from it was very strong, an indication that it must have been well saturated with "the curse" when falling into the race. It is more than doubtful whether the history of Ned Rafferty will prove of any avail to prevent others from pursuing the same course that led to his sudden and untimely end.

Donation to Marchmont Home.—It having been announced to the scholars of Benefort Union Sabbath School, that a collection would be taken up in behalf of this worthy object they handed in their littledonations on Sabbath, June 2nd, amounting to the handsome sum of $6.95 Now if all the schools in the province would just take this worthy object into consideration, a very large sum would be collected which would enable Miss McPherson and her co-workers to extend their work, and would thus be the means with God's blessing, of doing much more good. This donation is the more praiseworthy as it is the second one inside of six months. What school will be the next to help in the same way.

The Committee of the Protestant Home acknowledge with thanks the following donations for May.—Mrs. Nicholls, a parcel of clothing; Mrs. Shaw, onions for the garden; Miss Roger, piece of pork; Mrs. Shaw, pork and vegetables; Mrs. White, beef and veal; Mr Winch, quarter of veal; Mrs. Romaine, parcel of clothing and garden seeds; Miss Nisbet, dress and soft soap; Mrs. Romaine, soap grease; Mrs. F. Stewart, a basketful of crockery; Mrs. Wallis, rhubarb; Mrs. Alex. Smith, plants and roots for the garden.

A Convention of the Teachers of the Western part of the County of Peterboro was held on Friday, the 31st of May, and Saturday, the 1st of June. About forty Teachers were present. The following Officers were appointed:—President, Jas. C. Brown; 1st Vice President, James Campbell; 2nd Vice President, William Wood; Secretary, William O. Smith; Treasurer, W. L. Johnston; Committee, Henry Bennett, William O'Brien, Andrew Shearer, James E. Ford, D. Robertson, W. D. Russell, S. J. Duff, Mrs. Hunt, and Miss Agnes Ray. A committee consisting of Geo. H. Ash, John Wood and W. L. Johnson, was appointed to draft a Constitution and By-laws, to be submitted at the next meeting of the Convention. At the meeting, the following subjects were discussed:—Simple Rules of Arithmetic; Elementary Geography; Writing and Spelling; Reading; Good Order; and the Effects of the Recent Changes in School Law. The following is the programme for the next meeting to be held in the Union School, Peterboro, commencing on Friday, Aug. 30th, 1872:—Friday morning, Constitution and By-laws; Duties of Teachers, Mr. Brown and Mrs. Hunt. Friday afternoon, Grammar; Mr. Robertson and Miss Greenbow. To what extent and in what way should the Teacher assist Pupils? Mr. Shearer and Miss Anna Costello. Tables, Reduction Compound Rules, Greatest Common Measure, Least Common Multiple and Vulgar Fractions; Mr. Russell and Miss Agnes Ray. Friday evening, Addresses and Music. Saturday morning, Reading; Mr. John Wood and Miss Nicholls. Miscellaneous Questions; Methods of Securing Good Order; Mr. William Wood and Miss Guillett. History and the Methods of Teaching it, Mr. Campbell and Miss Ivison. Causes of Failure in Teaching, Mr. W. L. Johnson and Miss Cummings. The Teachers named in the programme above are to prepare Essays on their respective subjects.

The Hon. John Sandfield MacDonald died at his residence, Cornwall, on Sunday, the 2nd inst., at the age of 68 years. He was born in Glengarry, and having fully recovered from the effects of a severe attack of inflammatory Rheumatism, unfortunately after the last Session of the Local Legislature previous to his resignation.

He had been 31 years in active political life, being elected first in 1841, then a comparatively young man. In his early political life, indeed up to 1867, he was a consistent Reformer, always working with the Liberal party and opposing encroachments on the rights of the people. For a time he was leader of the Reform party and Attorney-General for two years. He opposed Confederation, but when affected accepted it and swaght in his way to make the best of it.

In an evil moment John A. Macdonald induced him to form a Coalition Government as Premier of the Local Legislature of Ontario, somewhat after the pattern of the Ottawa Coalition. By means of the "No Party" cry he succeeded in securing a majority in the House, and retained office four years. The history of these four years is well known to our readers; and the defeat of his party at the last election is fresh in the memory of all. After his defeat he took no very active part in the debates, in fact was not very regular in his attendance in the House, and on one occasion expressed his indifference to the passing of the Bill on "Dual Representation," saying "that he would never return to that House again," —perhaps not thinking that his end was so near. He was remarkable for independence of character in all he did. his will being the only principles of his party while in power.

Of a delicate constitution, and having the use of but one lung during the past 18 years, the wonder is that he remained in public life. Unlike many other politicians he continued the practice of his profession from which he must have derived a considerable income, as he is said to have died wealthy.

The estrangement from his old friends and allies must have been the cause of deep regret to him during the past four years. Now that he has passed away those who opposed him will be desirous of forgetting the errors that led to it, and be inclined to give him credit for whatever good he may have effected as a statesman or citizen.

His funeral took place on Tuesday and was very large, the Rev. J. S. O'Connor being the officiating Priest; and the ministers of the Episcopalian, Presbyterian and Methodist denominations attended the funeral out of respect to the deceased.

The Conservative Candidates.

Not long since we had good authority for believing that the Ex-M.P.P. of the West-Riding for Ontario was canvassing himself as candidate for the Commons, and knowing somewhat of the "vanity" of the man we expressed no surprise. A few days soliciting votes satisfied him that it was useless to try another election. Like the applicant for a common school, he felt that his looks were "again" him, we mean politically, of course.

Later developments point to Mr. J. F. Dennistoun as the coming man in the interests of Sir John and Sir George. He, as Chairman of the last Election Committee, feels that he has strong claims on the party, and of course on the Electors; and he is strongly of the opinion, no doubt, that those "Fly Sheets" imported by the committee from Toronto and industriously circulated by the members, will materially strengthen his position. It is not for us to say they will not. We are only giving currency to the rumors afloat, which by the way may turn out true.

It was generally understood that Mr. W. H. Scott was to be Candidate. Why is he discarded? Is he unwilling to meet the election face to face, or is there jealousy in the camp? We must confess that there was an apparent slight in the party passing Mr. Dennistoun, by while a stranger, so to speak, was to be brought out; and perhaps it is this that now forces Mr. Scott back and urges Mr Dennistoun forward. The men on both sides will soon have to be named fearless of consequences; hence whether Mr. Dennistoun be the Conservative Candidate or not, let the friends of Reform be ready. The Elections will be on us in less than two months. Even the Mail hints that.

THE APPROACHING CONTEST.

There is all probability that the Elections for the House of Commons will take place very soon—perhaps not later than July; indeed, we are not sure that the present month may not be the time. J. A. Macdonald is prepared to use any means likely to secure a majority to sustain him. The present session of the Dominion Parliament has witnessed the reckless character of the man more than ever, and has given occasion to the most reckless and one-sided Legislation. The men who now represent the people in the Commons have forgotten the pledges they made, and have voted for every measure proposed by the willy leader, not caring for the consequences to the country or the precedents they may be setting to future parliaments.

The manner in which they acted in reference to the Treaty is sufficient to condemn them, and to secure their complete defeat at the polls. Neither the love of country, the loss of territory, or the degradation of Canadians before the world deterred them from casting their votes to sustain the men who for the trifling guarantee of a small sum bartered away our noble river, the use of the Canals as a consequence of granting the navigation of the River, the Fisheries, and the undoubted claim we had on account of the Fenian Raids.

Ontario at the last election showed unmistakably that the people were not willing to vote $1,500,000 into the hands of Ministers to be laid out by them as they willed, even though for local improvements. What will they think of the men who have just voted $30,000,000 into the hands of Sir John and Sir George; and 50,000,000 acres of lands to be disposed of as they may dictate regardless of economy if thereby they can secure support in the House. In vain did Mr. Blake and Mr. MaKenzie point out the danger of voting the public money away in that manner. In vain did they show how that already 25 members of the House were provisional directors of the Pacific R. R. Company, and that with 35 members urging their claims and threatening desertion a Ministry could be intimidated and prevented from doing right. Argument was useless on this head, Sir John Macdonald were voted away countless millions acres of wild land, simply because not here.

Mr. Blake proved that the absolute

The Wesleyan Conference we understand from the Montreal Witness, will, at its annual session in the St. James St. Church in that city, hold a great public meeting, at which will be advocated the principles of total abstinence. The meeting will be under the control of the conference, and will be the first meeting of the kind held under any of the prominent religious bodies of this country. It is to be hoped that the noble example shown by the Wesleyan body, will be followed speedily by other religious denominations the church has too long left to a few of its members and in a great many cases to outsiders the duty of grappling one of its greatest adversaries. Let the churches declare unmistakably in the dealings with this question how they intend to consider their influence and authority. We heartily endorse the opinion expressed by the "Watchman" that the time is ripe for the first time when the Church and will use every its privileges in the question, and therefore fully labor for the advancement, will be left far behind in the glorious achievements of truth.—Free Press.

The Maine Legislature passed the Free grain bill, at the present rate of duty, thereby the Province of Quebec will be wholly deprived of timber. The bill may pass yet to commend at 20 cents per bush. of lime. If this passes the Provincial Government will not be able to collect one cent, and will not have a dollar to spend on roads, bridges, &c. Such a measure was never passed by the Legislature of any country, and will not be tolerated by the people.—Free Press.

THE DOMINION.

We understand that the terms proposed by the Committee have been accepted by the C. P. M. R. R. and Mining Company and that they are now awating the action of Peterboro.

There should now be no hesitation in going forward. The future of Peterboro is sure to be prosperous if those who control her affairs unitedly set themselves to secure for her trade of the surrounding country. With the Cobourg Road opened up and extended to the Georgian Bay, the Ontario and Quebec running through to Toronto, and a branch to the Pacific Railroad, this would be a great railway centre, a distributing point for east, west, north and south, and would make Peterboro one of the first cities in Ontario.

Already a By-law has been passed providing aid for manufactures. Let us now encourage railway enterprise to the best of our abilities

The only other outlay we can be called upon to assist is Water Works, and as that outlay has been brought down to the trifling sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, the whole thing of Railroads Manufactures, and Water Works would be only a trifle more than Bowmanville with less than one half our population, voted the other day for a Railway. Let us have a little wise counsel, and then action, and a prosperous future will be certain.

THE FAIR

The Spring Fair on Tuesday was not large. A shower in the morning no doubt preventing many from leaving home.

The market was not equal to that of an ordinary Saturday.

There were several milch cows on the ground, and prices asked ranged from $30 to $40. We do not know that either figures were realized.

Numerous Reaping and Mowing Machines were on exhibition.

Now that farm labor is both scarce and costly, machinery will have to be resorted to even more than heretofore. We expect, therefore, to learn of a large amount leaving our county to provide machinery to supply the place of manual labor, sums which would go far to encourage this branch of industry at home. We wonder very much that some of our enterprising mechanics do not give the matter a little consideration and endeavor to keep the money at home.

Business on Fair days is rarely better than on other days. Those who frequent them doing so for amusement rather than business. But owing to the rain on Tuesday, many, on returning home would be inclined to think that the pleasures of the day were more than counterbalanced by the unfavorable weather.

THE COBOURG R. R.

We understand that the terms proposed by the Committee have been accepted by the C. P. M. R. R. and Mining Company and that they are now awating the action of Peterboro.

CRICKET MATCH.

The first match of the season was played on the Ashburnham Ground on Monday last, between the Maple Leaf and Peterboro Cricket Clubs of this town.

The match was announced to begin at one o'clock, but owing to the nonappearance of the Peterboro Club at that hour, the match did not commence until after two. The Maple Leaf Club handled the "willow" first, and made a score of 58, against the excellent bowling of Messrs. Strong and Rackham. Then followed the Peterboro Club making a score of 35, off the superior bowling of Messrs. Hartley and Rutherford. "Hartley's bowling in particular, was greatly admired by all. In the second innings the Maple Leaf scored 50, and Peterboro 25. Majority for Maple Leaf, 48.

It must be a great source of satisfaction to the Maple Leaf Club, after so many attempts to defeat the Peterboro Club, to have at last succeeded, and with such a large majority.

We wish the Maple Leaf continued success and we feel satisfied that with whatever Clubs they may have the honor to play this season, they will do their best to keep up the credit of Peterboro cricketers.

The following is the score.

SELWYN TEMPLE.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—Your readers will be pleased to learn that our Soiree held on May 24th, was a complete success.

About 400 sat down to an excellent tea. The main object of the meeting was to raise funds for the erection of a Temperance Hall. We hope now soon to commence operations as we have a little over $300 promised and in hand.

The speeches, which were all short and to the point were by the Revs. E. Roberts, Craig, Clark, Dyall, and brother Crook.

The temperance cause is greatly revived in this neighborhood, and we trust the demon strong drink will ere long be banished from our boders.

T. DYALL.

The Lash In Guelph.

TWO PRISONERS WHIPPED IN THE GAOL YARD.

To day (Monday) at noon two of the prisoners convicted for assault with intent at the late Assizes, received a portion of their sentences. One, Theophilus Coates, for assault on the little Indian girl, near Hollin, received 20 lashes, and the other, Levi Gillies, for assault with intent on Mrs Husson, near Elora, received 30 lashes. The prisoners were whipped in presence of the Sheriff, Gaol Surgeon, the representatives of the Press, about half a dozen other parties, and in presence of the other prisoners in the gaol, who were taken into the yard. The culprits were strapped and fastened to a triangle made for the purpose and stripped to the waist. The implements of punishment were small canes or switches, which were vigorously applied by an old soldier, who was induced to undertake the work, and wielded his tool with dexterity and to some effect.

Coates was first strapped to the triangle, after which the cane was applied to his shoulders with stinging effect. The first blow made him howl, and as each succeeding one was applied he roared lustily, but otherwise stood his punishment with considerable nerve and power of endurance. Every application of the switch left its mark on his back and shoulders, which by the time he received 20 lashes, was seamed over with long and ugly stripes of blue and red. The case cuts cleaner than the cat—so old soldiers say—but the after effects of a caning are far worse than the blows inflicted by the old fashioned cat. When Coats had received his punishment he said something about being used like a dog, walked off the triangle himself, took his clothes and marched into gaol.

Gillies was then brought out and strapped up. On the first blow he winced very much, and after two or three more he twisted and tried to relieve himself, all the time roaring out that he could not stand it. Still the blows fell with telling effect until the thirtieth one was given, when his back was pretty quickened. He did not stand his punishment so well as Coats, and at the end remarked in a plaintive tone that he did not know how he could stand the rest of his sentence. He appeared at first to be fainting, but after a little came to himself, walked to the pump, took a drink of water and then walked into the gaol.

The other prisoners seemed to be impressed with the whole affair, and no doubt thanked their stars that they had not to undergo the same punishment. It is savage work, but for crimes of this description is not too severe, and may deter others from committing them.—Guelph Mercury.

The Republic Mercury reports a Farm Convention for Hastings County, to be held in Belleville on the 20th day of June next, at which the following subjects will be discussed:—Agricultural Education, Farm Drainage, Fruit Culture, Farm Implements, Stock Raising, Grain Growing, Dairying, Farm Fences, Farm Buildings, Farm Economy, Farm Crops, Farm Management, Farm Rotation, Farm Roads, Farm Manures, Farm Seeds, Farm Weeds, Farm Insects, Farm Forests, Farm Ponds, Farm Water Supply, Farm Gardens, Farm Orchards, Farm Vegetables, Farm Flowers, Farm Bees, Farm Poultry, Farm Cattle, Farm Sheep, Farm Horses, Farm Pigs, Farm Dogs, Farm Cats, Farm Rats, Farm Mice, Farm Moles, Farm Birds, Farm Trees, Farm Shrubs, Farm Vines, Farm Grasses, Farm Clovers, Farm Timothy, Farm Barley, Farm Oats, Farm Wheat, Farm Rye, Farm Peas, Farm Beans, Farm Corn, Farm Potatoes, Farm Turnips, Farm Carrots, Farm Parsnips, Farm Beets, Farm Cabbages, Farm Onions, Farm Lettuce, Farm Radishes, Farm Cucumbers, Farm Melons, Farm Squashes, Farm Pumpkins, Farm Tomatoes, Farm Peppers, Farm Eggplants, Farm Okra, Farm Sweet Potatoes, Farm Yams, Farm Artichokes, Farm Asparagus, Farm Rhubarb, Farm Horseradish, Farm Mustard, Farm Flax, Farm Hemp, Farm Tobacco, Farm Cotton, Farm Sugar Cane, Farm Maple Sugar, Farm Honey, Farm Wax, Farm Silk, Farm Wool, Farm Leather, Farm Fur, Farm Feathers, Farm Meat, Farm Milk, Farm Butter, Farm Cheese, Farm Eggs, Farm Poultry, Farm Game, Farm Fish, Farm Oysters, Farm Cl

Key but Taken.

In the Parliament of 1849, we find Sir Francis Hincks, undergoing the House of Assembly in Montreal in the following words. Speaking of the free navigation of the St. Lawrence he said, "The gallant knight (Sir Allan McNab) very much misunderstood the matter if he thought it alluded to the navigation of Upper Canada waters. He could state in the name of his hon. colleagues that they were not [illegible] to throw open the Canadian lakes to the Americans without getting something for it." Then Messrs. Baldwin & Lafontaine were in power, Sir Francis holding the same position he holds now in the government—a [illegible] Reform Ministry. Now, Sir John [illegible] Macdonald, a Tory of the deepest dye, is in power, and Sir Francis sits at his feet learning new lessons in the science of politics, among which is the [illegible] of swallowing the [illegible] Upper [illegible] of the St. Lawrence to the Americans without receiving one single item of advantage in return.

Some years ago the cry of disloyalty was brought against the Reform party, and Mr. Hincks, then a member of a Reform Government, was denounced as disloyal, but threw the false charge back with disdain in the faces of John A. Macdonald and [illegible] Tory party. Now, Sir John A. MacDonald, with Sir Francis Hincks as a colleague, makes a similar charge of disloyalty against the Reformers of Ontario, and Sir Francis sits quietly on his seat and chuckles to himself, while he ought to weep at his treachery.

In the [illegible] Hincks denounced the Tory party for having while in power commenced public works before other plans or money where provided. Now, Sir Francis supports Cartier in his Pacific Railroad scheme, which is provided with neither plans nor money.

Some years since the Tories met as a league to discuss annexation, and agreed with Mr. Gilbert Cameron to "drive the French into the St. Lawrence," which movement Sir Francis pointed in the blackest colors and denounced in the strongest language. Now, he sits side by side with a member of the League and Mr. Henry, who writes and speaks in favour of independence without a word of complaint. Such was Sir Francis then, such is he now.—Brockville Recorder.

South Granville.

The canvas of Dr. Brouse, the nominee of the Reform Convention for the representation of the South Riding of Grenville, in opposition to Mr. Shanley, is bringing out more and more proof of the fact that the protest against Mr. Fraser has its origin in religious bigotry and intolerance. Had Mr. Fraser been a Protestant there would have been no protest. Let Catholics remember this at the coming election. [illegible] has been repeatedly told to his face that as he supported "a papist" at the late election, he need not expect to get the vote or support of the party converted. This shows the spirit which actuates the Tory party. It is all well enough when Catholics allow the Tory party the use of their [illegible] to pull Tory nuts out of the fire, but the moment this work is done Catholics have no rights. Recorder.

MILITARY CAMP AT NIAGARA AND THE Y. M. C. A.—The Spectator says: We are glad to be able to announce the fact that the Toronto, Hamilton and St. Catharines Young Men's Christian Associations, aided by the military authorities, have now completed arrangements whereby the comfort and welfare of our noble volunteers will be greatly enhanced, while obtaining their annual drill at Niagara. A large open tent has been procured, which will be centrally located, and furnished with suitable reading matter and writing material, also a portion of the tent will be set apart for a conversation room, and it is proposed to provide a gymnasium. Meetings will be held regularly each evening, the programme for which will consist of readings, short addresses and music. A prominent feature in the arrangements will be the Sabbath services, in which the Battalion band will aid the musical services.

The Light Church Synod has not been idle. The following is a summary of its reforming labours:—The 'Absolution' in the visitation of the sick to be dropped altogether; also the words 'receive the Holy [illegible] the ordination of priest, together with the [illegible] those sins Thou dost forgive they are forgiven,' In the place of this a prayer is suggested:—"Almighty God, grant unto Thee the gift of the Holy Ghost," etc., all mention of the remission of sins being withdrawn. The lessons from the Apocrypha are excluded from the Lectionary, and the 'Black Letter Saints' are exiled from the calendar. In the Athanasian Creed the first two verses with part of the third and the last three (damatory) clauses, including the Doxology are omitted. Authority is also given to speak the words used when delivering the elements of the Holy Communion to whole railfuls of people at a time, and the practice of placing the elements on the Lord's Table (the 'Altar') at the beginning of the service by the parish clerk, is now at last formally sanctioned. This is done by adding to the rubric (that 'the priest shall then place upon the table') the words 'if this has not been already done.' The 'Ornaments Rubric' is obliterated, and an explanatory statement is made that wherever the word 'Priest' is used it is to be understood as 'Presbyter.'

"Garden Island?" is the name of a little islet in Lake Ontario, near the city of Kingston. The population is about 1,000. Twenty years ago a law was passed that no liquor, under any pretence, be brought on the island. There is not a pauper or a policeman among the inhabitants, and not a case has come before the magistrate for fifteen years.

THERE IS NO DISEASE WHATEVER OF THE BODY, IN WHICH DR. WISTAR'S Compound Elixir of Pectoral Balsam and Cubebs may not be used with positive benefit. Being a Chemical Food and Nervine Tonic, it acts physiologically in the same manner as our diet. It perfects digestion, assimilation, and the formation of healthy blood. It invokes the vital forces by supplying the waste occasioned by action, of nerve and muscle, as the result of mental and physical exertion, enabling mind and body to undergo great labor without fatigue. Its action in building up constitutions broken down with Wasting Chronic Diseases, by first living and healthy blood, is truly extraordinary, manifesting itself in invigorating all the organs of the body. Persistence being absolutely essential to cell formation and the growth of tissue, must for all time be Nature's great restorative and vitalizer.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL

Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgment of the people of any length of time. One of these is THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six of some of the best. Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in united and [illegible] preparations of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Wherever applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the small of Oils which they may contain.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1872.

This magazine is the eldest and has the largest circulation of any literary magazine in Canada. It aims at being a Canadian Magazine, both in the character of its matter, and in edging the way for Canadian writers. We do not our Canadian homes can find elsewhere, so interesting and so Canadian, and we ask all Canadians to sustain it. Husband:—I shall know them better hereafter, Druggists and Storekeepers are doing not only themselves a great deal of harm, but their customers also by inducing them to buy an article unknown and without merit. Perry Davis' Pain-Killer has been before the public for over thirty years, it is known in every quarter of the earth, and is sold by every Druggist and most storekeepers and grocers. As a Cholera specific and Diarrhœa medicine, its repetation has no parell, I am surprised that we have lived so many years without it.

Wife:—Charles, the reason you have been taking whatever the storekeeper would recommend, we have always had a bottle of Pain Cure or Reliefy or Pain Remedy or some such trash in the house, we have tried them over and over again

Husband:—And that is just the reason I objected to try the Pain-Killer on my Rheumatism, I thought it was like those other things a humbug.

Select Poetry.

Maggie and Maud.

A little girl with bare blue feet,
Stood homeless on the dismal street,
But scanty covering hid her form
From chilling wind and winter storm.

Another child, with foot well shod,
The airy pavement gaily trod,
She heeded not the gloom and storm,
Wrapped up in furs she felt so warm.

With rosy cheek and sparkling eye
Fair Maud the homeless child passed by.
Poor Maggie dropped a bitter tear
Beauty and wealth had passed so near.

"God help me, there is none beside
To help or pity," Maggie cried.
Maud heard the deep despairing moan,
And turning saw the orphan lone.

"What is the matter, dear?" she said,
"But first you must be warmed and fed,
We have one Father, you and I,
He'll care for you, so do not cry."

Together sped they through the storm,
And Maggie's poor chilled heart grew warm
Kind words and acts were something rare,
She thought her friend an angel fair.

No more with bare and weary feet
She wanders through the city street;
Maud proved in Maggie's sorest need
An angel in disguise indeed.

Ah, want and wealth, distress and pride,
Throughout the land walk side by side,
And though great wealth may not be ours
Where else were thorns, we can plant flowers.

Agricultural.

FARMES' BOYS.

Farmers who regard the future wellbeing of their children, especially those who desire to have their sons remain at home, and adopt their profession, and become intelligent and enterprising cultivators and managers of landed estates, thus securing competence, if not wealth and honorable positions, have much to do, by both precept and example, to accomplish the desired result. Home and its surroundings must be made pleasant rather than forbidding. Regard should be had to the arrangement and pleasantness as well as convenience and utility of the homestead building and its surroundings—including those inexpensive adornments which good sense, taste and attention easily secure. yes, easily, for those who think a home cannot by rendered beautiful and attractive without a large outlay of time or money are mistaken.

It is not expensive to have a neat flower garden, and such trees and shrubs as delight the eye and make home attractive far more than costly ot-jects—Nor is it prodigality, but rather economy, to have neat and durable outbuildings, fences, gates, and other farm appurtenances and conveniences, including the best labor-saving implements and tools to facilitate and lessen both farm and domestic operations. And, by the way, it is never wise to give the boys the poorest rakes, hoes &c., and then complain because they do not accomplish as much as fullgrown, ablebodied men. It is only just that they, being weaker, should be accorded the best tools and be favored and encouraged in other respects.

Some farmers—we trust their number is increasing—wisely encourage their sons to give them plots of ground to cultivate for their own benefit, or advantage, the increase or produce of which is to be their own. In this, and the like manner, many a young boy has been encouraged, given lessons in management, and acquired means which not only produced contentment, but led to success in after life. The hint, though not new or patentable, may prove suggestive to those parimentious farmers who force their sons to remain at home, laboring almost unceasingly, with rare holidays or opportunities for amusement or improvement.

All farmers who desire to imbue their sons with manliness and independence, and teach them to manage for themselves—to produce and save and invest judiciously—may safely act upon this suggestion. Let the boys have something which is their own, and thus not only encourage a just pride and ambition, but test and develope their industry, economy, and management. If you can do no more, give your boy or girl, or both, a plot of ground for flowers. It will pay you as well as them, both now and in the future.

ITEMS.

Stocks budded last year should be cut back to within three inches of the bud.

Root grafting ought to be got out of the way as soon as possible, so that no delay will occur in grafting trees in the open ground.

Scions—Cut when the tree is not frozen and before the buds start, and if not needed at once store in rawdust, moss, or sand, in the cellar.

Washing and Scraping:—When the weather is suitable, give the trees a thorough scraping, afterward apply a wash made with soft soap

Manure.—Cart to the orchards as soon as convenient, in order to prevent delay in planting, &c., when the spring fairly opens It there is snow, the manure may be hauled upon a sled, and save much labor in hauling. Supply the stable with plenty of absorbents, in order to save all the manure possible. Pack over the manure heap once a month, in order to facilitate decomposition.

Walls and their Coverings.

In the old days of wainscots when every room of any pretentions to elegance was lambrid with light or dark wood to a height of three or four feet from the base, it was far easier to effectively ornament the portion of a wall left uncovered, than it is when a sabroken surface swept, as now, from floor to ceiling.

If the pattern which covers this surface be large and positive, the effect is to lessen the apparent size of the room, and contuse with vulgar repetition. If on the contrary it is small and inconspicuous, there is a wearisome effect of monotony displeasing to a trained eye. Even if the paper be of plain tint and intended merely as a back ground for pictures, the effect is enhanced by contrast and breaks in surface. There are various methods to produce this result, as for instance:

A space corresponding to the ancient wainscot is left to the height of three or four feet above the floor, and filled in with paint or paper of solid color, harmonizing or contrasting with that which is used on the upper part of the wall. This is usually topped with a wooden moulding to serve as a "nearing," above which the lower tint or plain gray, pearl, green, is repeated in subdued pattern, the surface being broken at top and bottom by a narrow band of contrasting color.

Or, the paper, which is of any quiet shade, is relieved above and below by a broad band of velvet paper in rich, deep color, which, running also up the corners of the room, frames the paler tint as it were into a number of large panels. This plan is sometimes carried out very effectively.

Another way is to paper in three horizontal bands. the lower being of dark brown simulating wainscot, the next of plain green or lawn color, as background for a line of pictures, and the upper of delicate tasteful pattern, finished at the cornice by soft fresco tints.

Of these three plans we should recommend the first to people of moderate means and tastes. It costs no more to paper the lower part of a wall with plain paper than with figured, the strip of moulding at top adds little to the expense, and the proper tone and effect of the whole is had to command by the use of a cheap and easy application.

School for Scandal.

The Toronto Mail has recently set up a school for slander and is daily giving lessons to its pupils, the Tory press, which it must be confessed they have acquired much readiness in learning and practising. It ran-sacks every hole and corner in decomposed to every nuisance, is dead of the trash and with unbounded ingenuity invents falsehoods to the duties for the purpose of injuring the leaders of the Reform party. Nothing is too mean or contemptible or untrue if it but looks likely to [illegible] wished purpose.

It has set itself to work to get up charges against the members of the Ontario government to do duty in the coming campaign, and as the result is a reform member is given a string of falsehoods and unjust insinuations, which it redivorously thinks will serve to injure the Reform party.

We are told by the Head Teacher of this School for Slander, "that the Royal Canadian Bank receives a share of the Provincial account. Messrs. Blake Brothers and Company are appointed solicitors to the Bank."

The above firm may or may not be solicitors to the Bank, but whether they are or are not the appointment was in the hands of the Director.

Does the Mail intend to argue that the good Conservatives on the Directorate would be guilty of what it is pleased to look upon as a crime—that Mr. James Crawford, M. P. the President, that pink of Toryism could do wrong? But the charge irresistibly recalls some items in the history of the Patent Combination.

It will be remembered that Mr. M. C. Cameron, of the firm of Cameron and McMichael charged Mr. M. C. Cameron the Provincial Secretary, for legal advice and item actually appeared in the Public Accounts. It will also be remembered that he same Mr. M. C. Cameron, Provincial Secretary, signed a Proclamation offering a reward for the apprehension and conviction of the murderer of Mr. McGee, and that the same Mr Cameron, head of the law firm of Cameron and McMichael, actually took a brief to defend that murderer when discovered, for which service he was paid out of Private Funds.

It will also be remembered that the Independence of Parliament was violated in making Mr. H. D Smith an Arbitrator. Mr. Abraham Lauder a Trustee, and Mr. Hamilton Gowler a Sheriff be their sparate like following of Mr. J. S. Macdonald.

These things are all right in the eyes of the Mail of course, for you see that it is the other ox that is gored in these instances.

The Head Teacher goes on with the lesson and tells his pupils that—"Messrs. Edward Blake and Adam Crooks, readily come to the determination to appoint Queen's Council, Mr. Samuel Blake figures in this list."

This certainly is an unpardonable crime. To give a silk gown to which not one farthing or emolument attaches, but which is a mere professional dignity, to a man whose abilities as an Equity counsel superior to those only of his brother, is looked upon by the Head Slanderer as a corrupt act savoring of profligacy.

But what will the Head Slanderer say to the outrageous appointment of Colonel Cameron son-in-law to the Hon. Mr. Tupper, and the hero of the eyeglass-ring "the blasted fence." That was all right and proper doubtless, when looked at through Tory spectacles. But what will be said of this direct act of nepotism, when the fact is stated that the same Cameron, son-in-law of the same Tupper, swindles the country out of a couple of thousand dollars, under the flimsy excuse of travelling expenses which every one knows were not incurred? This we suppose is also eminently right and proper.

Further, to take up another of the pet ductions of the Head Slanderer we are told that Mr. Wells received the appointment of Crown Attorney of York, because he happened to be a brother-in-law of Mr. Boyd, ex-MPP for Prescott, and as a compensation to the latter for being beaten at the polls, and thereby losing the chance of a seat in the Cabinet. This is such a trivial and puerile charge that it hardly deserves notice, except to prove the desperate shifts to which the Opposition are compelled to resort in order to find fault with the Ministry. How would it look for us to say that the Police Magistracy of this city was given to its present occupant as compensation for his support of the Patent Combination, and his inability to secure re-election, on account of his being a leading Irish Catholic officer demanding writing threatening letters to Algoma Postmasters. It would be deservedly characterized as mean, because we do not know it to be true. It serves to show the Conservatives, if they have any sense of decency left, how shaking this line of argument looks when used against themselves.

Mr. Mackenzie is charged with unfaithfulness because he withholds a share of the Provincial account from the Bank of Toronto. We are aware that the stock of this bank stands high, but we all know how it is "run." Mr. Mackenzie displays his usual shrewdness in giving some of the Government funds into its hands. He wisely chose to consult the interests of the Province before those of Messrs. Gooderham and Worts. One would have thought however, that some meed of praise would be given to the Treasurer for withdrawing the funds of the Province from the Bank of Montreal which used them to gamble with in Wall Street, and placing them in the vaults of Ontario banks, even if one of them was not allowed a share. But no—no good can come out of a Reform Government if you believe a Tory had finder.

Blake's government policy has been entirely in accordance with the want of the country and no fault can be found with it generally, the excessive meanness of young the bloated Tory when in Opposition can't look scurvy, no lie to vile for him to use—and thirsty, it pauses beyond endeavour the alarm felt by the Premier at the certain results of the examinations. The slanders unerringly reflect the fear of certain defeat felt at Ottawa. These slanders are invented and circulated under orders from Ottawa, and they show that a bitter Tory will be a bitter Tory still, but he hold high office and sport a Windsor uniform.—Kingston Whig.

THERE IS NO DISEASED CONDITION OF THE BODY, in which Dr. WHEELER'S Composed Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya may not be used with positive benefit. Being a Chemical Food and Nutritive Tonic, it acts physiologically in the same manner as our diet. It promotes digestion, assimilation, and the formation of healthy blood. It supplies the vital forces by supplying the waste constantly going on, of nerve and muscle, as the result of mental and physical exertion, enabling mind and body to undergo great labor without fatigue. In action in health or by constitutions broken down with Wasting Chronic Diseases, by fast living and bad habits, it truly deserves the title of being immediate in energizing all the organs of the body. Phosphates being absolutely essential to cell formation and the growth of tissues, must for all time be Nature's great vet native and vitalizer.

That science is not above giving its attention to little things, is shown in La Moniteur Scientifique Quesneville, for March, in which Dr. Quesneville desires to save our linen from the destructive effects of soda and other washing powders, by recommending the following mixture: 2 pound of soap are dissolved in 5½ gallons of nearly boiling water, and to this is added three large tablespoonfuls of ammonia, and one of spirits of turpentine, In this the linen is to be soaked for three hours, when it is readily cleansed, requiring but little rubbing. Ammonia does not affect linnen or woolen fibre as soda does.

"KNOWED HE FORGOT SOMETHING."—"I say, cap'n," said a little-eyed man as he landed from the steamer Peytona, at Natchez, "I say, cap'n, this ere aint all." "That's all the baggage you brought on board, sir," replied the captain, "Well, see now, it's according to list—four boxes, three chests, two bandboxes, a portmantu, two hams (one part pork), three ropes, inyons, and a basket-ole; but I'm dubersome. I feel there's something short, though I counted 'em nine times, and never took my eyes off 'em while on board; there's something not right, somehow." "Well, stranger, the time's up. there's all I know of; so bring up your wife and five children out of the cabin, and we're off."—"Them's us, darstit, them's us! I knowed I forgot something."

A good story is told of Mr. John Ramsay, whose life has just been published. He was speaking one day of the old practice of rough-and-ready word-and-blow correction, and illustrated it as follows: I min' weel, when I was scarcely five years old, how my father taught me that. The good woman had been hearing me repeat the Lord's Prayer. She had added to her other instructions that night the information that the next night she wished me, in addition, to say something of my own—something that I earnestly desired God to grant me. Ye can fancy my amazement, when from the lips of her kneeling boy there arose the petition, "O Lord, gi'e my mither a better temper, Mak' her—." The 'din' that instantly rang out through my head rings in it now when I'm speaking o't.

The Minister's Character.

There is no profession, no effort, in which character is so absolutely essential to success as the Christian ministry. Men will retain a tippling lawyer, if he have power to sway juries, running the risk of finding him tipsy on the court day. The physician, whose skill in the healing art has made him famous, may be profane and licentious, and yet retain his patronage. The rakish artist, if genius moves his brush or chisel, finds a ready and remunerative sale of his masterpieces; while the statesman, or politician rather—alas for our times!—fears the falling of his majorities less because of his moral delinquincies, than for the mandates of his party. Not so with the gospel minister. His purity of character is an indispensible co-efficient of his success. This is because Christianity is not a science, only a system of religious truth. It is this, but it is more. It is a life, a Divine, transforming power. It is efficiently preached when its truths are exemplified in the life of the preacher, as well as inculcated by his tongue. He preaches in vain who cannot point to his moral rectitude, his even saintly character, as a specimen of the transforming power of the gospel.—Rev. Dr. Steele.

Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites is presented by the first physicians in every city and town where it has been introduced, and it is a thoroughly efficient preparation.

Mr. Blake on the Fisheries.

THE TREATY OF WASHINGTON BILL.

On the order of the day being called, Sir John A. Macdonald said this was the proper time in carrying out the arrangement arrived at the other night, to move the second reading of the Bill to give effect to the Treaty of Washington. He had spoken at such length on introducing the Bill, that the House would hardly pardon him if he went over the whole ground again. Probably at some future stage of the debate he would take occasion to address the House again.

Hon. Mr. Holton said it would be the regular course to move that the Government orders be now called.

Sir John A. Macdonald said he was obliged for the suggestion. He moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, that the Government orders be now called. Carried.

On the order for the second reading of the Treaty Bill being called,

Hon. Mr. Blake rose and said he regretted that this duty, which belonged to the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) had devolved upon him, for he felt how inadequate any exertions of his would be to place before the House and country, in their proper light, the consequences, as he conceived them, of this transaction—a transaction momentous in its general consequences, and to his mind far more momentous in its more remote results. He would endeavour to place before the House, in as few words as possible, what the course of the negotiations had been on this question; what the course of the Government had been; and what ought to be the attitude of this country. It would be within the recollection of the House that the question of the Fisheries, to which he proposed to devote his attention, was no new one with us for a number of years. During the existence of the Reciprocity Treaty, any questions that might have been connected with the subject were met at rest, as were all questions arising out of the possible collision of American fishermen with our own fishermen, or the possible violation by American fishermen of our undisputed or disputed right. When that treaty terminated, the Government of Canada found it was imperatively necessary to take prompt steps towards the assertion of the rights of Canada and those of the Maritime Provinces. At that period, 1866, Confederation was imminent, and very properly the Government of the then Province of Canada had regard to that imminent event in the observations they addressed to the Imperial Government in reference to the situation of affairs. At that time, at any rate, whatever might be the present views of the hon. gentleman opposite, they presented the correct view as to the importance of the fisheries of British North America, not merely with reference to their value, but with reference to considerations far beyond their monetary value—such, for example, as our undoubted right to them, the attributes of a nation that we possessed in possessing them, and the attributes of strength we possessed as a nation derivable from the large number of hardy seamen whom they trained and employed. He now proposed to trouble the House with an extract from a Minute of Council, dated 23 March, 1866.

"The intrinsic value of the fisheries is not very generally known in England nor the important influence their possession must hereafter exercise on the destines of British North America. The take of fish by provincial fishermen irrespective of Newfoundland, now amounts annually in value from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000, employing upwards of 20,000 men and boys, and providing a nursery for hardy seamen which will as the future make British North America the predominate maritime power on this continent. This trade, even subject to the competition of American fishermen, has had a very rapid growth, and now forms the staple of the exports of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. In Prince Edward's Island, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, the market for the coarse grains, potatoes, and dairy produce, forming the bulk of their agricultural production has been in the United States, and, being now in a great measure closed, it is evident that a change of industry must to a certain extent take place. This opportunity is offered in the inexhaustible fisheries on their shores, and it is evident that any additional value which may attach to the catch of fish will tend to simulate this industry, and to reconcile the people to the losses which will necessarily attend a change of production. The United States do not possess on their coast any fisheries of much value, and though they still hold, in common with other nations, the right of deep sea fishing, still the mackerel and herring fishing is now almost wholly within the three mile coast limit, and the catch of bait is entirely inshore. The exclusion of American fishermen from the inshore fishing will, therefore, give the Provinces the entire control of the mackerel and herring fisheries, and a great advantage in the cod fishing, and it cannot be long before the former fishermen will prove unable to compete with the latter, even with the high duties levied by the United States on fish. It is also to be observed that a very large trade in fish now exists between the United States and the foreign West Indies, which a very inconsiderable cost on the part of Canada might transfer to the British Provinces. The committee have only thus far treated the question as affecting the Maritime Provinces, but it is proper to remark that the most valuable fisheries are those resorted to by Canada, and form the principal means of livelihood to the bulk of the population on the St. Lawrence and the Bay of Chaleurs, below Quebec. Canada desires to preserve these fisheries, not only for her own people but in the interests of the Maritime Colonies with whom she hopes speedily to be united, and their preservation and development must in the future be an object of the highest interest to the Confederation as a source of national strength and defence, the more essential from the extending line of sea coast which will have to be protected. The action of the United States having forced upon the Provinces the search for other markets, the control of the supply of fish becomes of immense importance, and, if wisely used, this staple of commerce will greatly tend to open new channels of trade by enabling our merchants to make up assorted cargoes cheaper than can be done by American traders to the same foreign countries. It has been much questioned whether the concession of inshore fishing to the United States would not in a financial point of view a mistake, and even from its material aspect much more than equivalent for any favors given to the Provinces by the Reciprocity Treaty, but the very proper anxiety to avoid national complications has always furnished sufficient reasons for acquiescence in the settlement then made of the question, and, from the same cause, the Canadian Government now desire to treat the subject with the utmost discretion. The step, if taken now, is plainly and publicly known to be the consequence of the act of the United States. They and not Great Britain have cancelled the agreement, and voluntarily surrendered the right of fishing. The course suggested would certainly be regarded by the American people as evidence of weakness on the part of Great Britain, and of an indisposition to maintain the rights of the colonies, while it would disturb and alarm the provinces. The determination to persist in encroachment and in resistance to the law would be strengthened by the impunity of the past year, and the danger of collision when exclusion becomes necessary would thus be much increased, while the value of the right of fishing for the purpose of purpose of negotiation would be diminished precisely in proportion to the low estimate which the Province would thus appear to have placed upon it. The Committee would also respectfully submit to Her Majesty's Government that any apparent hesitation to assert an undoubted national right, will certainly be misconstrued, and be made the ground for other and more serious exactions, till such a point is reached as neither country can recede from with honor. The Canadian Government could not consistently with what they regard as the true interests of the country consent to leaving the rights of Canada to her own fisheries in abeyance or in doubt, but they feel the importance of enforcing the recognition of this right of sovereignty in such a manner as will deprive United Stated of all just ground of complaint, and of avoiding as far as practicable those questions which caused past difficulties. They have therefore invited the Maritime Provinces to unite with Canada in the issue to the American fishermen of joint licenses to fish in all Provincial waters at a moderate fee, to form a fund for the maintenance of joint marine police."

In view of that Minute, he might say that he listened with amazement to what the Premier had said the other evening, knowing that he was a party to this Minute of Council. The result of that Minute was that the Canadian Government, in deference to the Imperial Government, agreed to a system of licences for one year only, in the hope that some arrangement would be arrived at. This arrangement was followed almost immediately by an attempt at negotiations, opened on the part of the United States, which preceded a considerable time for settlement, but it fell through, in consequence apparently of the United States Government not proposing that in the mean time, and pending negotiations, the United States fishermen should cease to enjoy privileges that had been accorded to them. It was there would be a long time consumed in the possibly abortive negotiations, and, in the meantime, it was thought out of the question to let American fishermen remain in their old position. The Premier had informed the House that this system was tried, and proved a failure. It was to a certain extent a failure, a nominal license fee was paid to some extent, but it was discovered that practically, the system had become unsatisfactory. Under these circumstances, it was obviously necessary that some line or other should be taken on the subject. That line was taken, it was the abolition of the license system, and exclusion of the United States fishermen from our fisheries. He knew it was not an adequate way of speaking to read extracts, but in one sense it was adequate, and therefore he would again trouble the House, for it was always satisfactory to be able to prove your case out of your adversary's own mouth. He now proposed to read the views of the hon. gentleman opposite, as they were found in the Annual Report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, dated 30th June, 1869:

This cessation of the temporary system of policy on the part of the Government is simply defensive. It has now become an imperative necessity either that foreigners should cease to enjoy the unrestricted use of the fisheries exclusively ours, or else grant us some equivalent in trade for the concession of such important privileges. United States citizens cannot longer expect to avail themselves of access to Canadian waters without it. Above all, they need not hope to be so in the future, whilst upholding a commercial policy studiously hostile to our interests generally, and particularly burdensome to the fishing interests of the Maritime Provinces. The very liberal and conciliatory means which were devised by Canada on the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty in order to obviate the entire exclusion of Americans from our inshore fishing grounds have not met with the slightest appreciation, but on the contrary the United States Government have not, so far as I am aware, taken any special steps to prohibit compliance with the licensing system, while United States fishermen have thus all in their power to defeat and divide its chief conditions. Indeed it remains to be viewed as strengthening the popular belief in the validity of their own extravagant and untenable claims, and the assumed weakness of Canada's position. It is, therefore, fast degenerating into a virtual abandonment of all national rights of fishery on our own coasts. The time has arrived when we must [illegible] and maintain it as the basis of the treaties existing between Great Britain and the United States. The material worth and national importance to Canada of the great and leading fisheries in British American waters can scarcely be over-estimated. The temporary and indulgent policy hitherto pursued will immediately give place to a definite policy of exclusion, agreeable to colonial interests and consistent with national dignity and rights. The undersigned need not enlarge upon the vital and vast importance to the Dominion of Canada of a strict maintenance of these principles of maritime jurisdiction and rights of fishery derivable from the Crown. [illegible] as the intrinsic value of the exhaustless fisheries which form no large a portion of our coast and exclusive, their rightful control and exclusive use is intimately connected with the new constitution and prospects of this country. The actual situation and future development of these inshore fisheries acquire if possible additional importance from the accession of a seaboard line of railway to the provinces of the British North American Confederation. If these Provinces must in future depend more than in their own resources, and open new markets for their own native products, our attention cannot now be too soon turned to the development of our vast and valuable fisheries. They should form a staple of an extensive and lucrative trade with foreign countries, and with the other British colonies; they provide a most important nursery for fishermen; and they afford an inexhaustible field for the skill and energy of our [illegible] seaboard population. They possess a great and peculiar value to Canada; their exclusive use, therefore, affords these United Provinces such advantages as a young country cannot too highly estimate, and should on no account sacrificed or abandon."

Well, things went on for another year, and the system of exclusion in course of adoption, at the period which he had now reached was adopted; and he would read a portion of the Fishery Question as it stood a year latter, the year ending 30th June, 1870, according to the views of the Government; not the departmental report, but a few extracts from very interesting documents, as interesting to themselves as they were inconvenient to the hon. gentleman opposite.

"It is with sincere gratification that reference is made to the improved state and abundant yield of the Canadian fisheries during the past year. Their general condition and increasing productiveness are most satisfactory. In many instances the produce has nearly doubled that of last season. The prosperity of the fishing population in different parts of the country, and the consequent revival of our fish trade, are justly ascribed in a great measure to the excellent fishery laws enacted by Parliament, and the judicious system of protection and regulation which the Government have carried out conformably with such enactments. The value of the fish products, the annual increase of the yield, and the enhanced value of the product from our fisheries show how rapid and extensive have been their development. Without reckoning all the catch by foreigners, the actual value of the exportation of the produce of our waters in the Confederated Provinces now exceeds seven millions of dollars: nearly doubling in ten years. The labor and capital engaged in them have correspondingly increased. A few years more of efficient protection to the inshore and inland fisheries of Canada, as well from domestic injury as against intrusion by foreigners, will doubtless favor the further development of this resource. The presence of so many foreign fishing vessels along our coast and the ingenuity of parties interested have heretofore enabled them to allude the Customs officers who are stationed on the shores. Anterior to the Reciprocity Treaty, similar frauds and evasions prevailed to a very serious extent, and were but inefficiently checked by the Provincial Revenue cruisers. U. S. fishing vessels fitted out expressly for inshore fisheries, after obtaining British register under a pretended transfer from the original foreign owners to residents in the Provinces, were constantly fishing side by side with British fishermen. The practice was seriously detrimental to our Maritime industry, and retarded the growth of our fishing marine. Since the revival of protective operations under the statutes affecting foreign fishing vessels, this dual mode of evading the customs laws and infringing our fishery rights has also revived. There are so many [illegible] for passing in and out of our bays, ports, and harbours, at all times, in connection with the fishing pursuits of foreigners, and so many Canadian vessels are now sailed up with the American fleet, that it has been found impossible to detect such frauds and evasions except through the agency of the marine force, dealing at the same time with foreign vessels under the fishing laws. The fact is that American fishermen cannot successfully prosecute the Fisheries, without [illegible] using our inshore waters, nor without frequenting our bays, ports, and harbours. These privileges we really cannot in justice to our trade, and the avocation of our own seaboard population, permit any foreigners to use without some adequate equivalent.—EXTENT AND INTRINSIC VALUE OF THE BRITISH NORTH AMERICAN FISHERIES. There is no country in the world possessing finer fisheries than British North America. As a natural possession they are inestimable, and as a field for industry and enterprise they are inexhaustible. Beside their general importance to the country as a source of maritime wealth and commerce, they also possess a special value to the inhabitants. The great variety and superior quality of the fish products of the sea and inland waters of these Colonies afford a nutritious and economic food, admirably adapted to the domestic wants of their raised and laborious population. They are also in other respects specially valuable to such of our people as are engaged in maritime pursuits, either as an [illegible] industry or combined with agriculture. The principal localities in which fishing is carried on do not [illegible] present facilities [illegible] to [illegible] ship building, [illegible] in extent and facility, and are subject to certain [illegible] disadvantages. The prolific nature of the adjacent fishing grounds, and the convenience of their [illegible] are a necessary consequence of the [illegible] and climate. On such grounds alone the great inland fisheries of [illegible] British subjects have claims on their continued, are of peculiar value; and as regards [illegible] of the [illegible] privilege of fishing are practically speaking an element [illegible] Without [illegible] we regard them as being absolutely and important for domestic subsistence, or in their much larger import as a valuable element, capable of [illegible] development and lucrative [illegible] and employing an amount of capital reckoned by many millions of dollars, and engaging the labours of hundreds of thousands of persons, encouraging maritime pursuits, fostering the commercial marine, promoting foreign trade, keeping always and productively in active training an independent and spirited class of seafaring men; the teeming waters around the coasts of the British North American possessions and those which form their great lakes and magnificent river, present to our view a natural property, richer and more perpetual than any mere monied estimate can express. It is in the highest degree gratifying to find that British subjects are becoming every year more and more alive to their vast importance, and that Canadians especially are now more than ever anxious to preserve them as the finest material portion of our colonial heritage. The fact of foreign nations having always clung with such tenacity to every right and common liberty which they have been enabled to secure in these fisheries, and the eagerness which foreigners manifest to establish themselves in the actual use of such extensive and lucrative privileges, constitute the best extrinsic evidence of the wide-spreading influence of their possession, and the strongest testimony to their industrial and commercial worth—VALUE OF FISH CAUGHT BY BRITISH AND AMERICAN FISHERMEN.—Under the Reciprocity Treaty the quantity of fish caught caught by the United States fishermen was more than double their catch prior to 1854. While the licensing system was in force, their operations being somewhat restricted, the catch diminished, and last season the exclusion of American fishing vessels from the inshore limits, of a marine league from the coast, and the denial of certain facilities for prosecuting the fisheries around our shores just outside of the boundary, have caused a further serious decrease; the major part of the fishing fleet having returned with little more than half fares, and many vessels having almost entirely failed to procure cargoes.—PROTECTION OF THE INSHORE FISHERIES AGAINST ENCROACHMENTS BY FOREIGNERS.—There is a general concurrence of opinion that the entire exclusion of foreign fishermen from the waters of Canada has enabled Canadian fishermen to pursue their calling to much greater advantage than formerly. This has been the case both as respects the quantity of fish caught and the prices obtained. The various suggestions which have been made from time to time through your excellency for the more effectual protection of these fisheries against foreign intrusion, have therefore proved of material benefit to the country. Should it be found advisable to further protect our fishery rights in the full measure contemplated by Treaty stipulations there is every reason to anticipate still more beneficial results. If Canadians can be assured of the permanence of such comparatively unfettered occupation of their inshore fishing grounds as they are but beginning again to enjoy a powerful impetus should be given to the fish trade, for which the maritime provinces are so favourably situated.—INTERPRETATION OF THE TREATY OF 1817 BETWEEN BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES.—There is no dispute about the exclusive right of fishing within the space of a marine league, measured from a low water mark all around the sea coasts of Canada. It is to our exclusive claim of bays, creeks or harbors our spacious dimensions, as within territorial limits, that the United States take exception. The recognised mode of designing the geographical water boundaries of every country is by imaginary lines drawn from one headland to another at points forming the entrance to the inland waters. Americans claim an exception to this rule meerely on the ground of necessity and permissive usuage; and we simply claim the same construction of international law, as they apply to their own, and such applicable to our bays, coasts and headlands, as is universally recognised by all civilised nations; and under these laws and practices their claim is groundless. But the growing necessities of their fishermen magnify such pretensions; their shore fisheries are rapidly declining, having been abandoned for successive years to the greed and ingenuity of enterprising fishermen. Ours are protected and [illegible]. There is something, therefore, more rigorous and tenacious, if not stronger, than a sense of just right, —the conviction of present interest, and the prospect of future deprivation, —impelling them to adhere to such an extravagant claims. Canadians, also perceive that, in addition to their rightful possession and legal title, the fortunes of their young country depend in some measure on the retention and development of almost every acre of the marine fields around their coasts. Hence our anxiety to retain our own, as as great as that of our foreign neighbours to participate in our coveted wealth, and we claim for our people the same exclusive right to control the fisheries within the three-mile limit, that we do to control the mines or the timber, or the soil of our country."

There were several other observations in reference to this matter which were almost though not quite equally deserving the attention of the House. It would be observed that the policy of the Administration, acquiesced in by the country then, was to [illegible] and preserve not merely upon the ample consideration of money value but also upon those higher considerations which were expressed in the State papers to which he had referred, the exclusive rights in our own. The policy at this crisis of the Government was to [illegible] tation to assert those rights to our own, any apparent hesitation to assert an undoubted national right, would be [illegible] with consequences of a most serious character, [illegible] still [illegible] the misconception that [illegible] been reached from which a remonstrating country could not recede with honour. Well, what was the open question? The open question, if it could be called an open question, was as to the headland line.—With reference to the three-mile limit, as interpreted by the United States, there was no principle in claim for that limit of this Government; and let the Government be [illegible] leader of the Government, who tal

Wimbledon Team.—We see from the scores of the 40 competitors from whom the 20 to go to England are to be selected that Mr. David English, son of our townsman, John English, Esq., stands 11th in order of the score, having made 245 points, the highest score being 266. Success to Mr. English, and as he is certain to go to England, may he be as successful there as he has been in Canada as a marksman.

Canadian Monthly.—The June number of the Canadian monthly is before us and is an interesting one. Letters from High Latitudes by Earl Dufferin, our new Governor General, will be read with much pleasure, and the more especially as the author is just now coming to the Dominion. It is $3 a year and can be obtained direct from the publishers Adam, Stevenson & Co., or from Mr. Kidd, or Mr. Mennie.

Messrs. Dodge and Martin, valuators of the Government lands in this County, are now in Town. They have visited Galway, Enniamore and North Monaghan, and expect to examine the lands in the other Townships soon. We trust that they will deal fairly with the settler, as well as with the Government. They will have some difficulty in valuing some of the granite rocks in the Northern Townships.

Press Excursion.—The members of the Press Association intend having their Annual Excursion to Muskoka Lake and hold their annual meeting at Bracebridge. They meet at Toronto on the 8th prox., and next day proceed to Bracebridge, via Northern Railway. A more beautiful route could not be chosen than the Executive Committee have selected for the excursion, and we feel certain all will enjoy and appreciate the romantic and magnificent scenery of our beautiful lakes.

Burglary.—The Dry Goods Store of Mr. J. A. Rossborough, George Street, was entered last Thursday morning, or rather perhaps during the night, and about $350 worth of valuable goods taken.—There is no clue to the guilty parties yet. It is also said that some private houses in the North Ward have been entered by thieves lately. These things will cause a little more care in preventing a recurrence of such things.

At the regular monthly meeting of Protection Fire Company No. 1, held in the Firemen's Hall, on Thursday evening last, in was moved by Lieut. Marshall, seconded by Lieut. Goldey,—That the thanks of this Company are due to the Citizens and Hotel keepers of Peterboro and Ashburnham for the very liberal manner in which they assisted this Brigade in celebrating the 24th of May.—Carried unanimously.

Lacrosse.—The Millbrook and Peterboro Clubs on Thursday last, had a nice contest at this interesting Canadian game, the Millbrook being the winners in three consecutive games. There were a good many spectators on the grounds, and the playing was very good, especially in the first game, which lasted one hour and 10 minutes; the other two games were 20 and 3 minutes respectively. The defeat of the Peterboro' Club will tend to sharpen the members up, and will do them more good than a victory. The Millbrook Club is a "cracked" one, and certainly many of the players manifested skill in handling the ball, not easily surpassed.

The Local's Beaver.—A messenger from the Government arrived in Town on Tuesday, with instructions to the Warden of the County to remove the Lock's Bridge according to the agreement of the Company building it. In consequence, men were put to work yesterday to take it down. It will remain with the County Council to say whether they will rebuild it or not. It will cost a large sum to place a swing in it, perhaps nearly as much as the new Iron Bridge cost. The question is would it not be cheaper to raise the bridge high enough to permit the passage of the Steamboat under it, by doing so the cost of a man to attend to the bridge would be done away with, and the present cost of raising it would be trifling compared with the expense of putting in a swing. The County Council will meet next Tuesday, and then the matter will receive their attention.

West Toronto.—We understand the Conservatives are about to invite Sir John A. McDonald to a Banquet in Peterboro, in a short time. They are afraid of the appearance of things in this County, and are determined to bring the "Boss" to the scene of action, as an, if possible, to avert disaster. Well, we will not act so contemptibly as they did last summer.—We will lampoon no one, but wish them a good time. Our only advice to them would be "to keep sober." The Conservatives have as good a right to a feed as other people—let them have one. But John A. can do no good in this County. He may as well go to Washington again.

Mr. Fairbairn met a number of his friends on Tuesday evening last, in Mc. Hill's Assembly Rooms. There was a full attendance. Mr. Alex. Smith, occupied the chair. Mr. Fairbairn explained the position of the present Ontario Government, and the excellent measures they had secured for the Country in one short Parliament. He also referred to his own course in supporting them, and his strong desire in doing so to carry out as far as possible the wishes and principles of those who elected him to represent them. He advised action on the part of Reformers, as he believed the collapse of John A. McDonald and his party was as certain as that of John Sandfield's, which was now completely demoralized. At the close of his remarks a resolution expressing entire confidence in Mr. Fairbairn as a representative, and satisfaction with the course he had pursued, and expressing confidence in the Blake and MacKenzie Government, was carried unanimously. Immediately after, a Reform Association was organized and officers selected, a full report of which we hope to be able to give next week.

To the Friends of Reform throughout The East Riding.

We have been instructed to give notice to the Reform Electors of the East Riding that there will be a meeting in Keene on Tuesday the 25th inst., for the purpose of consultation, and also to form a Reform Association for the Riding. A cordial invitation is extended to all who desire to co-operate with the party in securing good representatives, as well as to all who have worked so nobly to that end in the past. We hope to see a large meeting and that none will stay away because not personally invited. There is no time to be lost, as the government at Ottawa is prorogued, or about to be to day, and the elections may be on us in a few weeks. A convention for the Riding must soon be called; and a candidate selected.

Preliminary meetings are necessary before this can be done, and hence the meeting at Keene.

The Reform party must organise, only in this way can the party succeed. This is the time for it.

A few weeks steady and united work will ensure the defeat of Sir John and Sir George

Let there be a full meeting at Keene on the 25th.

The Duty of the Hour.

The prorogation of the Dominion Parliament will in all probability take place to day, and the members will return to their homes to prepare for the approaching contest. The Conservative members will return fully aware of the Ministry's plans and schemes, as far as they can be revealed to them. Fully aware of the time of issuing the writs and of the plan of action proposed, they will at once be found canvassing the electors, and endeavoring to get as many as possible committed to support them.

The first duty of the hour on the part of the Reform party is to have their men in the field, so as to counteract the schemes of the other party.

A second duty is, electors should be careful not to commit themselves. Local or personal prejudices should be thrown aside, and a hearty co-operation with the leaders of the party given by all, then success is certain.

Very often personal feelings prevent that warm support and hearty co-operation necessary to ensure the complete triumph of the party. Jealousies spring up and produce inertness, or perhaps a sly opposition that proves more injurious than even voting against the candidate and being otherwise quiet. All should remember that it is difficult to induce good men to undertake a political contest and so long as personal feelings prevent electors supporting the candidate of the party, the difficulty will remain and perhaps become greater.

It is the duty of every friend of his country, and of every lover of good government, to do his utmost to defeat the government of John A. Macdonald, and seek to place in power those who will more scrupulously guard the interests of the Dominion, and seek to build up in British America, a nation noted for patriotism, unwilling to alienate her citizens, and ready to sacrifice everything rather than give our land to strangers or barter away our privileges.

It has long been a plank of the Reform platform that the Ministry should be amenable to parliament for the outlay of all moneys, and that no man is worthy of the confidence of the people who will vote their money into the hands of any set of men to be used as they think fit.

During the present Session of Parliament, no less than Thirty Millions of Dollars of public money has been placed in the hands of the Government to spend as they may. This could not have been done but that the Ontario Members were untrue to the acknowledged principles of the leading party in the Province. It is certainly one of the duties due the country to see that all who voted this money to the Ministry, free from Parliamentary control in the future—be left at home.—To this end let the Reform party put their shoulders together, united, and success is as certain now as at the last contest. Divide and secure defeat.

Groping Their Way.

The supporters of Sir John A. Macdonald in this County are at their wits end to find a Candidate. At one time Mr. Dumbstown is the right man, then Mr. Scott, and again the late M. P. P. Rosh in turn desirous of serving in the ranks of that distinguished Statesman.

The party has not decided on the man yet. Latest rumours point to Mr. Cluxton as the coming man in their interest, but there is no certainty, as since Mr. Scott is again heard of as the choice of the two or three who manipulate Conservative politics.

John A. is to be in town in a few days when he will tell the "faithful" how to act. Already they have, no doubt received partial instructions, but are only able to grope their way.

Presentation.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—At Lakefield on Friday evening last, Mr. W. J. Wallace, on the eve of his departure for Thunder Bay, was entertained to a supper by the members of Harmony Hall Debating Society. The supper was served in Mine Host Gobeen's usually elegant style.

After ample justice being done to the viands, Dr. Hodge on behalf of the Society, presented Mr. Walace with a costly present accompanied by an appropriate address.

Mr. Wallace then in a few well chosen remarks made a suitable reply.

On the following Monday Mr. W. left for the West, carrying with him the good wishes of his many friends and numerous acquaintances.

Cruelty to Animals.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—Being on the Market Square last Fair Day, I saw a number of cows for sale and the uneasiness manifested by them, together with the milk on the ground where they were standing, indicated plainly that the poor animals had not been milked in the morning. On speaking to two or three of the owners on the reprehensible practice, I was assured that the cows were milked since the night before. If there ever was a case of cruelty to animals it is in the practice referred to. No doubt several of the cows were driven many miles—and possibly some of them driven back without being milked. The sellers, no doubt, considered that the cows having distended udders a sale would be more readily effected;—but no sane buyer would be entrapped by any such artifice, and every right minded person would join in condemning the cruel practice. An example or two in the Police Court may possibly effect what a remonstrance will not.

Yours truly,
MERCER.

New Canada Act

Points the Canadian Statesman.

Dear Sir,—For many years past the Cathedral of Kemptown, in the County of Peterboro', have sorely felt the want of a suitable edifice for the celebration of divine service. With a zeal worthy of all praise, they erected a large log church when the Township was first settled, in order that their children might be properly instructed in the holy faith, which they brought with them from the Dear Old Land. At the time this Church was built it afforded ample accomodation, and was considered a splendid effort for their slender means. But time, as is ever the case, brought its changes. With the progress of population in other townships throughout Canada, that of Kemmore kept steady pace; in fact, so rapidly did its Catholic inhabitants grow in numbers that ere many years elapsed they found that renewed exertions would be required on their part in order to adequately meet their ever increasing spiritual wants. Of late years the old church has become altogether too small, is not long capable of giving even standing room to half the congregation; of late years, many of those who liberally contributed towards its erection have been blessed with success in their temporal affairs; of late years also, through the medium of the public press, they have received almost daily intelligence of how new churches were being erected by their co-religionists in other places throughout the Dominion. Could they then remain apathetic? Would they do nothing for the advancement of religion in their midst? No. Under such circumstances it will not be surprising to hear that their zeal prompted them to erect another church, which would be a greater honor to God, and reflect lasting credit on themselves. Their venerable Pastor, Father Coyle, heartily endorsed their noble resolve, and for the past two years has been unweariedly engaged in soliciting means and collecting material for the laudable undertaking. This spring the work of building was commenced, and so vigorously has it been prosecuted that the walls are now ready for the roof. The church is of Gothic design, and is situated on a beautiful eminence near the village of Enniamore. Its dimensions are 85x40 feet. The foundations are built of stone, and the superstructure of red brick of uniform color. The walls on each are supported by solid pilasters, and the front elevation will be ornamented by a tower and spire 150 feet high. The interior is to be finished in the most approved style. It will be neatly pewed, and will have a gallery capable of seating one hundred persons. The building is admirably proportioned in all its parts, and when completed will present a most imposing appearance, and will be another graceful tribute to the architectural ability of Mr. Duffus of Lindsay. Seeing, then, what a magnificent edifice the Catholics of Enniamore are erecting, it will be easily understood that extraordinary efforts will be needed in order to meet the outlay necessary for its completion. In this connection, the manner in which they have already taxed their means is worthy of imitation by more prosperous parties. Though not very numerous comparatively speaking, and though by no means in affluent circumstances, yet one and all are doing their duty nobly. It will doubtless be a source of gratification to hear that their Protestant brethren in the Counties of Peterboro and Victoria are generously aiding them in the glorious work in which they are engaged—some of these having contributed the magnificent sums of $20 each, and other amounts ranging from $5 to $10, $20 and $30. These facts speak volumes for the happy state of religious feeling in said counties, as well as for the high esteem in which the respected Pastor is held by all classes in the community. To the latter, this church may be truly said to be a work of love—day and night has he labor for it. Besides devoting his undivided attention to the prosecution of the work, he has also given five hundred dollars from his own private means to the building fund. To one of his age, verging as he is on seventy, the trouble attending the superintendence of such an extreme undertaking must be trying indeed. But though old in years, he is yet young in courage, in industry, and in zeal, when there is a question of promoting the glory of God and the spiritual interests of the flock confided to his pastoral care. In the course of his active missionary career he has built no less than five other churches, but this one is his favorite—in this one all his affections are centered—this one he intends to be the crown of all his labors in the vineyard of the Lord. It is to be hoped that he will be spared not only to complete it, but to minister for many years at its altar, in the midst of a people whom he has served so well, and who, in return, love him with all the warmth and affection of their noble, generous, Irish hearts.

I am, dear Sir,
Yours very truly,
A Recent Visitor.

The refusal of the Dominion Premier to account for the $200,000 of Secret Service Money, voted on three several occasions by Parliament since Confederation, naturally excites suspicion and remark. Mr. Young suggested that a confidential audit should be made by a committee pledged to secrecy, of which at least two should be members of the Opposition. Sir John A. McDonald refused to entertain the proposition. We are not believers to any large extent in the necessity of a secret service Fund, but if there be such a fund, it should not be handed over to the unaudited mercies of any man or Government. What has been done with the $200,000, to what unscrupulous uses it may have been put, we suppose will never come to light; but Parliament should insist for the future on an audit of some description. If everything is quite, why refuse all information?

The Collingwood Bulletin says Washago is a myth and a humbug, that the scarcity of houses there is a fact but not a misfortune. If our friend of the "Bulletin" has any rich relations and will send some of them to Washago we can satisfy them that Washago is a reality and that not only is there a great demand for houses at present, at good rentals, and that the demand must continue to increase as our valuable water powers are utilised; but there would not be any use of you coming here for we never yet heard of a publisher of a country newspaper, who published it long, that had money enough to build a back shed, except about election time. —Pioneer.

From a letter which appears in the British Whig, we learn that Mr. Johnston, of Ballykilbeg, and representative of Down, in the British Parliament, will visit Canada, and be in Kingston on the approaching 12th of July. The writer says:—

The brother who is planning the route of Mr. Johnston's tour, proposes that, after arriving at Quebec, and being entertained there, he shall come up the majestic river St. Lawrence to Montreal, the brethren of which are making their preparations to do honor to their visitor.—From Montreal he will proceed to the capital of the Dominion by the Ottawa River. From Ottawa by the Canada Central and Brockville and Ottawa Railway, he will proceed to Brockville, the cradle of Canadian Orangeism. At Carleton Place, Perth, Smith's Falls, and other places along this route he will be welcomed by thousands of his admirers. At Brockville, he will take one of the splendid steamers of the Inland Navigation Company, and pass through the Thousand Islands of the St. Lawrence to Kingston, the Derry of Canada. From Kingston, by that beautiful sheet of water, the Bay of Quinte, he will proceed to Picton and Belleville, thus following the route and mode of travel of H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, when in this country. Leaving Belleville, the Towns of Cobourg, Port Hope, Pamenborough and Lindsay will be visited in the order in which the names are written here. Kingston will be, as it were, the central part in the entire tour, and the order in which he will visit cities and towns west of that splendid city will depend on the time at the disposal of our distinguished visitor.

THERE IS NO DISEASED CONDITION OF THE BODY, Scrofula Do. WHERE-EVER Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya may not be used with positive benefit. Being a Chemical Food and Nutritive Tonic, it acts physiologically in the same manner as our diet. It perfects digestion, assimilation, and the formation of healthy blood. It sustains the vital forces by supplying the waste constantly going on, of nerve and muscle, as the result of mental and physical exertion, enabling mind and body to undergo great labor without fatigue. Its action in building up constitutions broken down with Wasting Chronic Diseases, by fast living and bad habits, is truly extraordinary, its effect being immediate in energizing all the organs of the body. Phosphates being absolutely essential to cell formation and the growth of tissues, must for all time be Nature's great restorative and vitalizer.

WE WILL YOU KNOW.—The "Canadian Pain Destroyer" instantly and permanently removes all pain from the system, and is decidedly the best medicine known for the cure of rheumatism, pleurisy, neuralgia, tic doulourenx, toothache, colic, hysterics, chest pains, &c., and being cheap adds all one more to say it. Sold by all Medicine Dealers.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL

Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six of some of the best. Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be forged of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. This is the preparation, of this Oil a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Wherever applied you get the benefit of every drop, whereas with other preparations nearly all the alchol is lost in that way, and you get only the smell of Oils which they may contain.

NEW DOMINION MONTHLY.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1872.

This magazine is the oldest and has the largest circulation of any literary magazine in Canada. It aims at being a Canadian Magazine, both in the character of its matter, and in edening the way for Canadian writers. In the latter field it has up to the present been a failure, so for as remunerating its contributors and its publishers is concerned; but as its circulation is fair, we are in hopes that a good advertising patronage may yet put it on paying basis. We do not our Canadian homes can find elsewhere, so interesting and so Canadian, and we ask all Canadians to sustain it. Its circulation is 3,500. *New Dominion Monthly 1,50 per annum in advance. THE REASONS WHY

LAZARUS, MORRIS & Co's

CELEBRATED

Perfected Spectacles,

AND EYE GLASSES,

have met with such extraordinary success and are so much in demand:

1st. Because they are found to possess all the qualities claimed for them.

2nd. Because they will reclaim sights abused by the common glasses, and will often be found to restore failing sight to its natural state.

3rd. Because no glimmering or dimness is experienced in their use, and being fitted on optical and scientific rules, they are guaranteed against injury to the Eye Sight from improper adjustment.

4th. Because the system of fitting is an unerring guide to the true requirement of each purchaser—our agents are furnished with this system—also our own.

5th. Because the never tire the eyes and last many years without the necessity of change.

6th. Because being the best they are the cheapest.

Innumerable testimonials might be here given but the use of these Spectacles and Eye-Glasses will best prove their inestimable value.

Husband:—I shall know them better hereafter. Druggists and Storekeepers are doing not only themselves a great deal of harm, but their customers also by inducing them to buy an article unknown and without merit. Perry Davis' Pain-Killer has been before the public for over thirty years, it is known in every quarter of the earth, and is sold by every Druggist and most storekeepers and grocers. As a Cholera specific and Diarrhœa medicine, its reputation has no parell, I am surprised that we have lived so many years without it.

Wife:—Charles, the reason you have been taking whatever the storekeeper would recommend, we have always had a bottle of Pain Cure or Reliefor Pain Remedy or some such trash in the house, we have tried them over and over again.

Husband:—And that is just the reason I objected to try the Pain-Killer on my Rheumatism, I thought it was like those other things a humbug.

Be sure and get the genuine Pain-Killer, only 25 cts. per bottle. Beware of counterfeits.

Peterboro, May 1872.

THE HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER.

The Arrival of the Schoolmaster.

A PRIVATE LESSON FROM [illegible]

The following lively sketch is the first chapter from the "Hoosier Schoolmaster" the most popular American tale which has been issued for many years. The Montreal Witness is about to print it serially, beginning with the first of June. The Weekly Witness containing it is to be given for 50c. from that date to the end of the year—cheap enough, certainly.

"Want to be a schoolmaster, do you? You? Well, what would you do in Flat Crick deestrict, I'd like to know? Why, the boys have driv off the last two, and licked the one afore them like blazes. You might teach a summer school, when nothin' but children come. But I 'low it takes a right smart man to be schoolmaster in Flat Crick in the winter. They'd pitch you out of doors, sonny, neck and heels, afore Christmas."

The young man, who had walked ten miles to get the school in this district, and who had been mentally reviewing his learning at every stoop he took, trembling lest the committee should find that he did not know enough, was not a little taken aback at this greeting from "Old Jack Means," who was the first trustee that he lighted on. The impression made by these ominous remarks was emphasized by the glance which he received from Jack Means' two sons. The elder one eyed him from the top of his bearsy shoulders with that amiable look which the dog turns on a little one before shaking him. Ralph Hartsook had some thought of being examined by the standard of muscle. This notion of beating education into into young savages in spite of themselves, dashed his ardor.

He had walked right to where Jack Means was at work shaving shingles for his log-cabin. While Mr. Means was making the speech which we have set down above, and punctuating it with expectorations, a large brindle bulldog had been sniffing at Ralph's heels, and a girl in a new linsey-woolsey dress, standing by the door, had nearly giggled her head off at the delightful prospect of seeing a new schoolteacher eaten up by the ferocious brute.

Between the disheartening words of the old man, the immense muscles of the younger man who was to be his rebellious pupil, the jaws of the ugly bull dog, and the heartless giggle of the girl, Ralph had a delightful sense of having precipitated himself into a den of wild beasts. Faint with weariness and discouragement, and shivering with fear, he sat down on a wheelbarrow.

"You Bull," said the old man to the dog, which was showing more and more a disposition to make a meal of the incipient pedagogue, "you Bull, git out you pup." The dog walked sullenly off but not until he had given Ralph a look full of promise of what he meant to do when he got a good chance. Ralph wished himself back in the village of Lewisburg, whence he had come.

"You see," continued Mr. Mean, sitting in a meditative sort of way, "you see, we ain't none of your saft sort in these diggings. It takes a man to boss this deestrict. Howsumdever, if you think you kin trust your hide in Flat Crick school-house, I kain't put no 'bjection. But if you git licked don't come on us. Flat Crick don't pay no 'surance, you bet. Any other treasures? Wal, yes. But as I pay most taxes, t'others jist me run the thing. You can begin right off a Monday. They ain't been no other applications. You see it takes some grit to apply for this school. The last master had a black eye for a month. But, as I said, you can jist roll up and wade in. A. you've got pluck, may be, and that goes for a heap sight mor'n sinno with boys. Walk in, and stay over Sunday with me. You'll hev to board roun', and I guess you'd better begin here."

Ralph did not go in, but sat out on the wheelbarrow, watching the old man shave shingles, while the boys split the blocks and chopped wood. Bull smelled of the new comer again in an ugly way, and got a good kick from the older son for his pains. But out of one of his red eyes the dog warned the young school-master that he should yet suffer for all kicks received on his account.

"If Bull once takes a holt, heaven and yarth can't make him let go," said the older son to Ralph, by way of comfort.

It was well for Ralph that he began to "board round" by stopping at Mr. Means's. Ralph felt that Flat Creek was what he needed. He had lived a bookish life. But here was his lesson in the art of managing people. For he who can manage the untamed and strapping youths of a winter school in Hoopole County has gone far toward learning one of his hardest of lessons. Not twenty-five years ago, in Ralph's time, things were worse than than they are now.

The older son of Mr. Means was called Bud Means. What his real name was Ralph could not find out, for in many of these families the nicknames of "Bud," "Sis," "Pet," "Tot," and that of "Sis" which in the birthright of the eldest girl, completely bury the proper Christian name. Ralph was a general. He saw his first strategic point, which was to capture Bud Means.

After supper the boys began to get ready for something. Bull stuck up his ears in a dignified way, and the three or four yellow curs who pass Bull's satellites yelped delightedly delightedly and discordantly.

"Bill," said Bud Means to his brother, "ax the master of he'd like to hunt coons. I'd like to take the starch out of the stuck up fellow."

"Nough said," was Bill's reply.

"You darn't do it," said Bud.

"I don't take no such dare," exclaimed Bill, and walked down to the gate, on which Ralph stood watching the stars come out and wishing he had never seen Flat Creek.

"I say, Mister," began Bill, "mother, they's a coon what's been a eatin' our chickens lately, and we're goin' to try to ketch the varmint. You wouldn't like to take a coon hunt or nothin', would you?"

"Why, yes," said Ralph, "there's nothing I should like better if I could only be sure Bull wouldn't mistake me for the coon."

And so, as a matter of policy, Ralph dragged his tired legs eight or ten miles on hill and hollow, after Bud and Bill and the coon. But the coon climbed a tree. The boys got into a quarrel about whose business it was to have brought the axe, and who was to blame that the tree could not be felled. Now, if there was anything Ralph's muscles were good for, it was to climb. So, asking Bud to give him a start, he soon reached she limb above the tree which the raccoon was. Ralph did not know how ugly a customer a raccoon be, and so got credit for more courage than he had. With great peril to his legs from the raccoon's teeth he succeeded in shaking the poor brute off among the yelping brutes below. Ralph could not help sympathizing with the hunted animal which sold its life as dearly as possible, giving the dogs many a scratch and bite. It seemed to him as if he were like the raccoon, precipitated into the midst of a pack of curs. As Bill and Bud finished the poor raccoon and put an end to it, Ralph felt as much inside the decided way in which he did it, calling to mind Bud's comment: "If Bull once takes a holt, heaven and yarth can't make him let go."

But as they walked home, Bud carrying the raccoon by the tail, Ralph felt that his hunt had not been in vain. He fancied that even red-eyed Bull, walking uncomfortably close to his heels regarded him more favorably than before the climbed that tree.

"Purty peart kind of master," remarked the old man to Bud after Ralph had gone to bed. "Guess you'll better be a little easy on him. Hey?"

But Bud deigned no reply. Perhaps because he knew that Ralph heard the conversation through the thin partition.

Ralph woke delighted to find it raining. He did not want to hunt or fish on Sunday, and this steady rain would enable him to make friends with Bud. I do not know how he got started, but after breakfast he began to tell stories. Out of all the books he had ever read he told story after story. And old man Means, and old Miss Means, and Bud Means, and Bill Means, and Sis Means sat listening with great eyes while he told of Sinbad's adventures, of the Old Man of the Sea, of Robinson Crusoe, of Captain Gulliver's experiences in Lilliput, and of Peter Rabbit Cottontail's exploits.

Ralph had caught his fish. The hungry minds of these backwoods people, sick and dying of their own commonplace, were furnished with the new life that came to their imaginations in these stories. For there was but one book in the house, a library, and that, a well-thumbed copy of Captain Riley's Narrative had long since lost all freshness.

"I'll be dog-bit," said Bill ingenuously, "if I hadn't ruther hear the master tell them yarns, than go to a circus the best day I ever seed." Bill could pay no higher compliment.

What Ralph wanted was to make a friend of Bud. [illegible] have the seventy-four-gun ship on your own side, and the more Hartsook admired the knotted muscles of Bud Means, the more he desired to attach him to himself. But whether it struck out a peculiarly brilliant [illegible], he anxiously watched Bud's eye.

But the young Philistine kept his own counsel. He listened but said nothing, and the eyes under the shaggy brow gave no sign. Ralph could not tell whether those eyes were deep and inscrutable, or only stolid. Perhaps a little of both.

When Monday morning came Ralph was nervous. He walked to school with Bud.

"I guess you've a mine secured by what the old man said, ain't you?"

Ralph was about to deny it, but on reflection concluded that it was always best to speak the truth. He said that Mr. Means's description of the school had made him feel a little down-hearted.

"What will you do with the tough boys? You ain't no match for 'em." And Ralph felt Bud's eyes rest only measuring his muscles, but scientifically in connection. He only answered:

"I don't know."

"What would you do with me, for instance?" inquired Bud, drawing himself up as if to shake out the reserve power coiled up in his great muscles.

"I shan't have any trouble with you."

"Why, I'm the worst chap of all. I thrashed the last teacher myself."

And again the eyes of Bud Means looked out sharply from his shadowing brows, and rested on the slighter young man.

"You won't thrash me, though," said Ralph.

"Pshaw! I 'low I could whip you in a minute. You look as if a puff of wind would blow you over."

"I know that as well as you do."

"Well, ain't you afraid of me then?" and Bud looked fiercely down on Ralph.

"Not a bit," said Ralph, wondering at his own courage.

They walked on in silence a minute. Bud was turning the matter over.

"Why ain't you afraid of me?" he said presently.

"Because you and I are going to be friends."

"I am not afraid of all the other boys put together."

"You ain't. The mischief. How's that?"

Ralph's answer was lost because you and I are going to be friends, and you can whip all the rest together. You and I will do the whipping."

The diplomatic Bud only chuckled a little at this, whether he assented to the sentiment or not Ralph could not tell.

While Bud chuckled, Ralph on the [illegible] of the little faces full of [illegible] the big faces full of an expression [illegible] and further [illegible] cousin [illegible] Hartsook

Choice Literature.

From High Latitudes.

BY MRS. HERBERT, M.P.

From the Cornhill Magazine.

Our new Governor General, Lord Dufferin, is distinguished in many ways. As a public man, he has earned reputation for intelligence, industry, and liberality of sentiment. He is a graceful speaker. He shines in society. By his "Letters from High Latitudes" he won no mean position in the literary world. We have chosen one of the letters as a fair specimen of the author, and an index of the mind of our new ruler, who is a true descendant of Sheridan in eloquence, wit, and facility as a writer.

Back in Europe again—within reach of posts! The glad sun shining, the soft wind blowing and the posts on the cabin table,—as if the region of ice and ice we have just fled from were indeed the dream-haunted nightmare it seems! I must tell you how gay and joyous it all appears to us, fresh from a climate that would not have been unworthy of Dante's Inferno. And yet—had it been twice as bad—what we have seen would have more than repaid us, though it has been no child's play to get to it.

But I must begin where I left off in my last letter—just, I think, as we were getting under way, to the sound of La Reine Hortense out of Reykjavik Harbor. Having been up all night, as soon as we were clear of the land, and it was evident the towing business was doing well, I turned in for a few hours. When I came on deck again we had crossed the Faxe Fiord on our way north, and were sweeping round the base of Snaefell—an extinct volcano which rises from the sea in an icy cone to the height of 5,000 feet, and grimly looks across to Greenland. The day was beautiful, the mountain's summit bathed down upon us in unclouded splendor and everything seemed to promise an uninterrupted view of the west coast of Iceland, along whose rugged cliffs few mariners have ever sailed. Indeed, until within these last few years, the passage, I believe, was altogether impracticable, in consequence of the continuous fields of ice which need to drift down the narrow channel between the frozen continent and the northern extremity of the island. Lately, some great change seems to have taken place in the lie of Greenland ice, and during the summer time you can pass through, though later in the year a solid belt binds the two shores together.

Both in a historical and scientific point of view, the whole country lying about the basaltic roots of Snaefell is most interesting. At the foot of its southern slopes are to be found wonderful ranges of columnar basalt, prismatic caverns, ancient craters, and specimens of almost every formation that can result from the agency of subterranean fires, while each glen, and bay, and headland, in the neighborhood, teems with traditionary lore. On the north-western side of the mountain stretches the famous Eyrbiggja district, the most classical ground in Iceland, with the towns, or rather farmsteads, of Frodi, Helgafell, and Biarnarhaf.

This last place was the scene of one of the most curious and characteristic Sagas to be found in the whole catalogue of Icelandic chronicles.

In the days when the same Jarl Hakon I have already mentioned lorded it over Norway, an Icelander named Vermund, who had come to pay his court to the lord of Lade, took a violent wish to engage in his own service a couple of gigantic Berserks, named Halli and Leikner, whom the Jarl had retained about his person—fancying that two champions of such great strength and prowess would much add to his consequence on returning home. In vain the Jarl warned him that personages of that description were wont to give trouble and become unruly—nothing would serve but he must needs carry them away with him, nay, if they would but come, they might ask as wages any boon which might be in his power to grant. The bargain was accordingly made, but, on arriving in Iceland, the first thing Halli took it into his head to require was a wife, who should be rich, nobly born and beautiful. As such a request was difficult to comply with—Vermund, who was noted for being a man of gentle disposition, determined to turn his troublesome retainers over to his brother, Arngrim Styr, i.e. the Stirring of Tumultuous One, as being a likelier man than himself to know how to keep them in order.

Arngrim happened to have a beautiful daughter, named Aslina, with whom the inflammable Berserk of course fell in love. Not daring openly to refuse him, Arngrim told his would be son-in-law, that before complying with his suit, he must consult his friends, and posted off to Helgafell, where dwelt the pagan Portiff Snorre. The result of this conference was an agreement on the part of Styr to give his daughter to the Berserk, provided he and his brother would wad a road through the lava rocks at Bjarnarhaf. Halli and Leikner immediately set about executing this prodigious task, while the scornful Aslina, arrayed in her most splendid attire, came sweeping past in silence, as if to mock their toil. The postiff, somewhat oddly, as the young lady on this occasion by her sturdy admirer and his pals are still extant. In the mean time, the other servants of the crafty Arngrim had constructed a subterranean hall, so contrived that at a moment's notice it could be flooded with boiling water. Their task at last completed, the two Berserks returned home to claim their reward, but Arngrim, full as ill-in the exuberance of the reflection, greeted them the shameful fate reflected in store for them most hath. Nonsense! had they dropped into it, they Arngrim, shut down the trap-door, and had it covered with a newly stripped bullock's hide to be stretched across the entrance, as the signal for the cooking water to be turned on. Fearful were the struggles of the scalded giants, Halli, however, succeeded in bursting up the door, and his first plunged on the luckless bull's hide, and Arngrim thrust him to the heart.

His brother was then easily forced back into the cooking-vats.

The Saga, as quoted by the Dignitaries Olaf in the Chronicle of this exploit drolls coolly, and plans no result in mystical merit to those which I have already mentioned as having emanated from Grettir. [illegible]

As soon as the Pontiff Snorre heard of the result of Arngrim Styr's stratagem he came over and married the Lady Aslina. "Traces of the road made by the Stirring Champion can yet be discerned at Bjarnarhaf, and tradition still identifies the grave of the Berserks."

Connected with the same Pontiff Snorre is another of these mysterious notices of a great land in the western ocean, which we find in the ancient chronicles, so interwoven with narrative we know to be true, as to make it impossible not to attach a certain amount of credit to them. This particular story is the more interesting as its denouement, abruptly left in the blankest mystery by one Saga, is incidentally supplied to us in the course of another, relating to events with which the first had no connection.

It seems that Snorre had a beautiful sister, named Thurid of Frodi, with whom a certain gallant gentleman—called Bjorn the son of Astrand—fell head and ears in love. Unfortunately a richer rival appears in the field, and though she had given her heart to Bjorn, Snorre—who we have already seen, was a prudent man—insisted upon her marrying the richer suitor. [illegible] sails away to the coasts of the Baltic, and joins a famous company of sea-rovers, called the Jomsburg Vikings. In this worthy society he so distinguishes himself by his valor and daring that he obtains the title of the Champion of Breidavik. [illegible] After many years of deeds done by sea and land, he at last returns loaded with wealth and honors to his native country.

In the summer-time of the year 999, soon after his arrival, [illegible] fair at Frodo, whither all the merchants "clad in colored garments," congregated from the adjacent country. Thither also came Bjorn and the Lady of Frodo, "and Bjorn went up and spoke to her, and it was thought likely their talk would last for a long time, for such a length of time had not seen each other." This renewal of old acquaintance both the lady's husband and brother very much objected, and "it seemed to Snorre that it would be a good plan to kill Bjorn." So, about the time of hay-making, off he rides, with some retainers, to his victim's home, having carefully instructed one of them how to deal the first blow. Bjorn was in the hope-field [illegible] his sledge when the cavalcade appeared in sight, and guessing what motive had inspired the visit, went straight up to Snorre, who rode in front, and held the knife with which he had been working in such a position as to be able to stab the Pontiff to the heart should his followers attempt to lift their hands against himself.

Comprehending the position of affairs Snorre's friends kept quiet. "Bjorn then asked the news. Snorre confesses that he had intended to kill him, but adds, "thou lookest such a lucky grip of me at our meeting, that thou must have peace this time, however it may have been determined before."

The conversation is concluded by an agreement on the part of Bjorn to leave the country, as he feels it impossible to abstain from paying visits to Thured as long as he remains in the neighborhood. Having [illegible] Bjorn [illegible] sea in the summer time. When they sailed away, a northeast wind was blowing, which wind lasted long during that summer, but of this ship nothing was heard since this long time. And so we conclude it is all over with the poor Champion of Breidavik. Not a jot of it. He turns up, thirty years afterwards, safe and sound, in the uttermost parts of the earth.

In the year 1029, a certain Icelander named Gudlief, undertakes a voyage to Limerick, in Ireland. On his return home, he is driven out of his course by northeast winds, heaven knows where. After drifting for many days to the westward, he at last falls in with land. On approaching the beach, a great crowd of people came down to meet the strangers apparently with no very friendly intentions. Shortly afterwards a tall and venerable chieftain makes his appearance and to Gudlief's great astonishment addresses him in Icelandic. Having entertained the weary strangers very honorably, and supplied them with provisions, the old man bids them speed back to Iceland, as it would be unsafe for them to remain where they were. His own name he refused to tell, but having learnt that Gudlief comes from the neighborhood of Snaefell, he puts into his hands a sword and a ring. The is to be given to Thurid of Frodo, the sword to her son Kjartan. When Gudlief ask by whom he is to say the gifts are sent, the ancient Christian answers, "Say they come from one who was a better friend of the Lady of Frodi than of her brother Snorre of Helgafell." Wherefore it is ordained that this man was Bjorn, the son of Astrand, Champion of Breidavik.

After this madam, I hope I shall never hear you depreciate the constancy of man. Thured had better have married Bjorn after all.

I forgot to mention that when Gudlief landed on the strange coast, it seemed to him that the inhabitants spoke Irish. Now, there we may [illegible] inclined to believe in the former existence of an Irish colony to the southward of the Vinland of the Northmen. Scattered through the Sagas are several notices of a distant country in the West, which is called Ireland el Mekla—Great Ireland, or the white man's land. When Pizarro penetrated into the heart of Mexico, a tradition already existed of the previous arrival of white men from the East. Among the Shawnoese Indians a story is still preserved of Florida having been [illegible] by white men, who came from countenance. In 1666, the Island the Priest had in his possession a [illegible] crown, these thoughts ancient, of The Lands of the White men, or Hibernia Major, situated opposite Vinland the Good, and Gaelic settlements [illegible] to trace a [illegible] between many of the Anglo-Saxon Tribes (Saloon and the ancient Celts).

But to return to Gudlief. After [illegible] the object [illegible] Hvarf, at the [illegible] of Snaefell [illegible] Thurid [illegible] Bjorn [illegible] Kjartan [illegible] Gudlief

Information has reached St. Louis that a body of Indians variously estimated at from 3,000 to 10,000, having made a raid into Texas, and are now running Young Jack, Denton, and Porter counties. The Indians announced their intentention of proceeding to Huntsville to release Satanta and Big Tree, imprisoned there. It is reported that all the Indians on Fort Hill Reservation are on the war path. Already two fights have occurred near Weatherford, in which four whites were wounded and two Indians killed. Two Indians were captured and imprisoned. Well informed Texans believe a big Indian war is imminent. Many settlers are leaving their homes in alarm. It is reported that Gen. Augur has telegraphed for two more regiments of cavalry to report at the point threatened by the raiders.

What Next.—The Conservatives of North York have nominated Mr. A. G. P. Dodge, an American, as their candidate at the approaching election. Mr. Dodge, they say has become naturalized, but his American proclivities are not so easily shaken off and by each man as he is, Sir John could vote away more territory for Uncle Sam. They are ready, however, to form alliances with any person likely to bring strength to their waning cause. Mr. Farnham, an old resident of the Riding, is the Reform candidate and pretty sure of being elected it is said.

To the Friends of Good Government we would would say remember the meeting at Keene on Tuesday, at two o'clock Let there be a full meeting. Invite your friends and neighbors as a good commencement coupled with a firm resolve will secure hearty co-operation and certain victory.

Mr. Lewis Ross has accepted the nomination of the Reform party for the East Riding of Durham and is sure of election. Mr. Kinkaffler is spoken of as the candidate in the interests of the Conservative party.

Boers—Whose Were They ?—On last Saturday, while Mr. McWilliams was employing some of those under his care in building a wood-shed, in the jail yard, and while leveling the ground and digging post holes, they turned up bones that once belonged to two or more of the human species. One skull was exceedingly large, with a posterior well developed. The teeth were still in the jaws, and in a good state of preservation. They were taken from under a pine stump and must have been in that place a long time, and may have been the bones of some of the once rightful owners of the soil—the red men—as the site of our good town must have been a favorite resort of the Red men in days long past.

A "Pig" Fish—The Bobcaygeon Independent gives a short sketch of a fish seen in Sturgeon Lake. When seen it was as large as saw log, with horns two feet long a prodigious snake like neck and a gigantic head resembling a swan's plus the horns. Two persons (each in a canoe) had been compelled to flee for their lives, and it chased the "Ogemah" with extreme voracity. The inhabitants of the village are divided in opinion as to its being a plesiosaurus or an ichthiosaurus, but they are decidedly of the opinion that it is a 'Pig' fish, and in Sturgeon Lake.

A Midnight Scene.—On Wednesday night Constable Howden of the neighboring Village had Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Rosewell, an old man named O'Shea, and a vagrant called Armstrong, in the Lock up. Mr. Dunlop committed them to Jail, and Mr. Howden took them to it about 11 o'clock at night amidst shouts of revelry, mingled with oaths and now and then groans.

John Fraser, better known as "Cousin Sandy," a well-known litterary gentleman a few days ago put up at the Albion Hotel, Ottawa. Early in the week he disappeared, and no trace could be obtained until Friday evening, when he was found drowned at the Queen's wharf.

The Lady's Friend for July.—The leading plate in this number is a copy of Millais' famous picture of the Huguenot Lovers, accompanying which is a poem of remarkable beauty. The great St. Bernard Convent and Lake, is also a highly interesting picture. The Fashion illustrations are abundant and tasteful, and the Matchless Schottische a new and lively piece of music. Ella Rodman Church and Miss F. Hodgson have good stories—the latter especially fine. Mrs. Wood's novel is intensely interesting, and "An Everyday Heroine" by Amanda M. Douglas, is one of her best. There is a poem by Eleanor Donnelly, who always writes well, and a Song in the Wood by Louise Chandler Moulton. With such names the literary matter could not fail of high excellence. Price $2. a year. Four copies $6. Eight copies (and one gratis) $12. "The Lady's Friend" and "The Saturday Evening Post" $4. Published by Deacon & Peterson, Philadelphia. Single copies for sale by all News Dealers, and by the Publishers, price 20 cents.

The Bobcaygeon Independent say the Little Bob Bridge is in a dangerous state and should be repaired of course. It is not so important to us now, as the northern members of the County Council have arrived safe, and hence will not require to go round by Lindsay and Millbrook to get here.

Legal Mash.—Two Lord Chief Justices, the Lord Chief Baron and thirteen other Judges in England, are lost in a legal mass and cannot see daylight. A certain Mr. Allen married a woman and she died, whereupon he married another woman. Being fond of variety, and the second wife not dying with sufficient promptness, he married a niece of the first Mrs. Allen, while his second wife still lived, and was prosecuted for bigamy But the niece of his first wife being within the prohibited degrees of relationship, his marriage with her was void, hence he claims that it was no marriage, and therefore no bigamy.

Cricket Match.—Again we take much pleasure in announcing another victory for the Maple Leaf Club of this town. On Monday last a match was played at Norwood between the Norwood and Maple Leaf Cricket Clubs. The "Boys" winning by 9 wickets and 1 run. We must congratulate the Maple Leaf for the success that has attended them this year. The home of Peterboro exhibitors in spite of the ill luck that has attended the Peterboro Club of the town, will, no doubt be kept up by the Maple Leaf Club The playing of both clubs at Norwood on Monday last was very good. Success to the club and although they are badly in want of some fit place to practice on, it is to be hoped that they will soon have one, they having petitioned the County Council for the use of the Court House Green, and may soon therefore have a nice place for the purpose.

The Bible Christian Sabbath School Anniversary Services will be held on Sabbath first, and the Annual Tea on Monday

The Port Hope Guide says—The body of a man was found on the beach, at the foot of Hope Street. It was afterwards discovered that he hailed from Peterboro, having boarded here with Antoine Ward. He had been drinking hard for some days.

Ho! Sir John.

The great Political (Conservative or John A) meeting announced to come off on Tuesday, at two p. m., was minus at three o'clock. About half a dozen Office Seekers were around the entrance room, and the Rt. M. P. P. was busy hunting up a few forgotten friends who think an exchange of a little "bit" as of John A., or George Etienne Cartier.

Of course we cannot tell what was transacted, but judging from the few who attended the meeting, they did not do much. Sir John is to be here in July, they say, till that little will be written or said by the organ. Full instructions have not yet been received. Mr. Perry has returned from Ottawa, and was seen going toward the place of meeting, and would perhaps communicate the latest dispatches. He looks well, of which we are glad, appearing nothing the worse of the worry of the Session. Any rumour of severe attack of throat disease may be contradicted

The Member for the East Riding didn't file an appearance to aid with his counsel and sinews of war. But perhaps this can be secured out of the surest service money, of which Sir John refused to give any information.

Considerable hesitation is evident in their movements, but Sir John may be able to bring life to the dead bones. If Sir George cannot attend the demonstration next month, he should forward a few of the coddish he valued as high as he did the people of Ontario.

Reasons Why the Macdonald Cartier Government Should be Condemned.

They have had a trial of five years and have been found wanting in everything relating to Ontario.

Their unwise policy caused a Rebellion in Manitoba, which cost the Country a large sum of money to send an expedition to quell, and which was also the cause of the murder of Scott.

By their Nova Scotia Subsidy Policy they showed themselves ready and willing to violate even the constitution to retain influence and power.

They are recklessly squandering the public money in the construction of the Intercolonial Railway by a route that adds several hundreds of miles to its length, and several millions of dollars to the cost of construction.

They have undertaken to build the Pacific Railway in a period far too short for the careful and economical construction thereof and have voted into their own hands $30,000,000 of the people's money for that purpose it is true, but without responsibility to parliament for the expenditure of such an enormous amount.

They have voted away our Fisheries, worth over nine millions annually. They have given up the St. Lawrence to the United States. They have given them the right to navigate our canals as a consequence, and have obtained nothing, or comparatively nothing in return, and all to satisfy American rapacity, while at the same time the Treaty is not likely to be ratified by the High contracting powers.

They have increased the debt of the Country one-half at least, in five years—and if allowed to retain power, it will be doubled in the next five years.

They have unconstitutionally been guilty of exceptional legislation to the detriment of Ontario in order to punish it for its refusal to endorse the government of John Sandfield Macdonald and of course for thus condemning the policy of the Ottawa Government.

Sir John A. Macdonald has persistently refused to give even a reason for his acts, relying on the obsequeousness of his followers, and their readiness to vote blindly anything he proposed.

They have vetoed all legislation tending to ensure economical legislation and purity of elections, thereby continuing the corruption that prevailed up to the passage of the Bill of the Ontario Legislature, to secure purity in all election contests.

They refuse to have contested elections tried by Judges as in Ontario, that thereby they may if necessary for their purposes, be able to retain the services of a partizan who may be charged with obtaining his return by wrong means, as by the present law contested elections must be tried by a Parliamentary Committee.

The "No Party" cry enabled them to retain power during the past five years—while during the whole period the strongest party lines have been maintained, and only partizans appointed to the offices in their gift. The Cabinet yearly has become more Conservative, until at present it is high Tory, thus ignoring the basis of the Coalition of 64 that the Cabinet should consist of one-half Conservative and one half Reformers.

They have not adide representation by population by giving Manitoba and British Columbia a greater number of representatives than they are entitled to under Confederation Acts, and by their distribution of representation have proved themselves only desirous of retaining at the cost of inconsistency by their absurd division of Counties, so as to ensure the election of a greater number of followers in the next Parliament.

The Electors of these Ridings would do well to ponder over these reasons and the innumerable host of others that could be adduced, and by their united effort send men to the Dominion Parliament who will carry out principles more in accordance with the views of the people of this Province.

Town Council.

The Council met on Monday evening. Present the Mayor and Messrs. Smith, English, Hales, Hall, Hopkins, Paterson, Doherty, Stevenson, Robertson & Toole.

The Mayor stated that his object in calling the Council together was that the By-Law for granting aid to the Cobourg Peterborough and Marmora Railway Company required reading and publishing, that the Reeve of Monaghan and Deputy Reeve of Otonabee had required compliance by the Council, and then even others, hence the meeting was for general business.

Communications were read from Dr. Kinsold, informing the Council that no new cases of Small Pox happened, that those who had it were convalescent, and stating that some of the adults required new clothing.—Received.

From J. D. Armour, Esq., in reference to the By Law granting a Bonus to the Cobourg, Peterboro & Marmora R'y Co. and Mining Company.—Received.

From the Clerk asking for two weeks leave of absence.—Granted.

On motion of Mr. English seconded by Mr. Hall, the By Law was read a first time.

Mr. Smith stated that the accounts of Mr. W. Hamilton and the County Council should have been referred to the Committee on the Bridge, instead of the Finance, and on motion of Mr. Smith they were referred.

On motion of Mr. Edmison the Bonds of Messrs Peter Moir & Co were accepted. The Council adjourned till Tuesday.

Tuesday Evening, 18th June.

The Council met, Present Messrs English, Robertson, Smith, Patterson, Hall, Landy, Edmison, Doherty, Stevenson, Toole. In the absence of the Mayor Mr. English was called to the chair.

The minutes of the Previous meeting were read and confirmed.

A Deputation from the County Council consisting of the Warden and Messrs Peck Collins, Brown, Choate and Clegg, being present were heard. The Warden and Mr. Collins addressed the Council on the matter of placing the Swing in the Locks Bridge which is authorized by the Government at Ottawa.

The Warden stated that from information he had received from the County Engineer the cost would be about $2500.

After some discussion on the matter, it was moved by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Robertson that the application County Council for assistance towards the construction of a Swing in the Locks Bridge be referred to a special committee consisting of Messrs Smith, Toole, Hall and Edmison with power to take advice as to our power to grant assistance, and if assistance in considered prudent to adopt a plan in connection with a committee of the said Council and to submit it for the approval of this Council.—Carried

The Council then went into committee of the whole on the Second reading of the By Law, granting a bonus to the B. R. North of Peterborough to Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls. Mr. Landy in the chair.

The By Law was read a second time, and ordered to be published.

Moved by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Toole that the By Law be published in the other two papers if they will publish it on the same terms as the Review. —Carried.

The Council adjourned.

A Cricket Match took place on Saturday last, between the Lakefield and Peterborough Clubs, on the ground of the latter, and resulted in a victory for Lakefield, with a majority of 45 runs. The wickets were to have been pitched at One o'clock, p. m., but it was nearly Two o'clock before the game commenced, by Lakefield taking the "willow." Mr. H. WM. HIGINBOTHAM, M. D.,
Sec'y and Treas. L. C. C.

Lakefield, June 17th, 1872.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—In the Review of the 14th inst., is contained a paragraph headed 'Stopped' in which it is stated that in consequence of proceedings taken by Mr. Whyte, Mr. Hamilton has been prevented from building his New Foundry, and in order that it may be fully understood which Mr. Whyte he means, he refers to the person as the late partner of Mrs Hamilton.

I would in the first place remark that I do not think it any portion of a journalist's business to interfere with or make remarks upon the differences of private individuals, and especially to attempt to cast odium on a party, or suggest that which would mislead the public. His endeavor, as is quite plain, was to place me in an improper light before the public, and cause them to think I had, from some malice against Mr. Hamilton, been pushing to prevent the erection of a fine building. He has thus used his position to take a mean advantage that no gentleman would have been guilty of, in fact no honorable man would have published the article at all without first making enquiry as to the truth or falsity of what he had been informed. If the editor of the Review had done so, he could have learned that I for not the plaintiff in the suit—first instance were taken against [illegible] I was not present in the [illegible] I [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The Geneva Tribunal.

The World's special, from Geneva, the 17th, says:—Notwithstanding all denials the English argument was submitted on Saturday, upon the suggestion of Count Sclopis that the pleadings should not be communicated, and the English declaration of withdrawal might subsequently be presented. The tribunal has adjourned until Wednesday, owing to the delay of Americans. The Court is strongly inclined to grant England's request for adjournment.

GENEVA, June 17.—The Board of Arbitration met at two this afternoon. The first part of the session terminated at three, when all except the arbitrators withdrew. The latter remained in consultation until four, when the sitting adjourned until ten o'clock to-morrow morning. It is thought the Americans will not consider, though a shorter adjournment might be requested. Very little was transacted before the board to-day besides the announcement of the Duchy of Montpensier of resignation from his government. There is some reason to believe that the main difficulty in submission has been found and that the basis has been reached upon which it is possible to continue negotiations. The English agents received on Sunday night a long despatch from their government, and subsequently a meeting and long conversation took place between Sir Roundell Palmer and Mr. Wm. M. Evarts. News has been published here that Lord Granville had stated in the House of Lords that the English agents would present a summary of English argument before the board, but Lord Granville's subsequent explanation is not generally known here. This statement, therefore, greatly mystified both sides, as no summary had been presented, the English agents wondering how such statement had been promulgated without knowledge. At the meeting between Sir Roundell Palmer and Mr. Evarts, all things was explained and a distinct understanding had upon the other points of the despatch. The different members of the tribunal [illegible]

[illegible] we would remove, —generally, quickly, and without hesitation; for there is no grace in a benefit that sticks to the fingers.—Seneca.

Being a Chemical Food and Nutritive Tonic, it acts physiologically in the same manner as our diet. It produces digestion, assimilation, and the formation of healthy blood. It sustains the vital forces by supplying the waste constantly going on, of nerve and muscle, as the result of mental and physical exertion, enabling mind and body to undergo great labor without fatigue. Its action in building up constitutions broken down with Wasting Chronic Diseases, by fast living and bad habits, is truly extraordinary, its effect being immediate in energizing all the organs of the body. Phosphates being absolutely essential to cell formation and the growth of tissue, must for all time be Nature's great roots native and vitalizer.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL

Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six of some of the best. Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and pre lessing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different or admixture. Thus in the preparation, of this Oil a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Wherever applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the smell of Oils which they may contain.

Husband:—I shall know them better hereafter, Druggists and Storekeepers are doing not only themselves a great deal of harm, but their customers also by inducing them to buy an article unknown and without merit. Perry Davis' Pain-Killer has been before the public for over thirty years, it is known in every quarter of the earth, and is sold by every Druggist and most storekeepers and grocers. As a Cholera specific and Diarrhœa medicine, its reputation has no parall, I am surprised that we have lived so many years without it.

Wife:—Charles, the reason you have been taking whatever the storekeeper would recommend, we have always had a bottle of Pain Cure or Relievr or Pain Remedy or some such trash in the house, we have tried them over and over again.

Husband:—And that is just the reason I objected to try the Pain-Killer on my Rheumatism, thought it was like those other things a humbug.

BACKBONE.

When you meet fellow-mortal
Without fashioned feature views,
Hanging on the other's favor;
Walking in their [illegible];
Bowing low to wealth or favor,
With object, well defined,
Ready to retract [illegible],
Willing to be [illegible]ed,
Walk yourself with firmer bearing,
Throw your [illegible]
Show your spine has nerve and marrow—
Just the things which [illegible] lack.
A stronger word
Was never heard
In sense and tone
Than this, backbone.

When you see a theologian
Hugging close some ugly creed,
Fearing to reject or question
Dogmas which his priest may read,
Holding back all noble feeling,
Choking down each manly view,
Caring more for forms and symbols
Than to know the Good and True,
Walk yourself with firmer bearing,
Throw your moral shoulders back,
Show your spine has nerve and marrow—
Just the things which his most lack.
A stronger word
Was never heard
In sense and tone
Than this backbone.

When you see a politician
Crawling through constructed holes,
Begging for some fat position,
In the ring or at the polls,
With no sterling manhood in him,
Nothing staple, broad or sound,
Destitute of pluck or ballast,
Double-sided all around,
Walk yourself with firmer bearing,
Throw your moral shoulders back,
Show your spine has nerve and marrow—
Just the things which his most lack.
A stronger word
Was never heard
In sense and tone
Than this, backbone.

A modest song and plainly told—
The text is worth a mine of gold;
For many men most sadly lack
A noble stiffness in the back.

PROFANITY.

An interesting incident is recorded in the life of Cæsar Malan, eminent evangelical reformer of Geneva. He commenced his career as an instructor of youth, and though, from his childhood up, he had been of a singular thoughtful nature, and was early in life the subject of converting grace, the bad habit common among his countrymen of using his Creators name both lightly and frequently clung to his speech. Without knowing it, he used it in the school among his pupils, and, perhaps, might not have been aware of it. but the example was followed by the scholars. These the name of the great God coming thoughtlessly from their [illegible] him painfully. He [illegible] to reprove them when conscience reproved him: "I do this myself; how can I blame them?"

He instantly resolved on an amendment. Calling the boys around him, he told them his way of speaking was wrong; and he made an agreement that they were to watch him, and he would watch them, so as to correct what he thought to be a sinful practice.

He was very guarded for two reasons: he wished to avoid the sin, and, as a schoolmaster, he wished not to give his pupils an opportunity of corrupting him. At length, one day, when he was speaking with great animation to the school, he used the words, "Mon Dieu" (My God.) Instantly all the scholars rose, and continued standing. He inquired the cause, and the head boy replied by telling him of the name he had used. The good master stood still for a moment; confronting his task, and in a grave and sorrowful manner expressed his contrition for his fault; afterward kneeling down among them—they kneeling also—he offered up a prayer that God would pardon the past, and give them grace, that in the future his name might be honored among them and his command obeyed.

Doubtless that touching scene was never forgotten by those present; it never was by the master, for he must long years after, have related it to his son who has written his life. Happy the man who has the humility openly to own his faults to those whom his example may of injured, and the wisdom to go to the strong for strength to overcome them. Reader, it is written: "The Lord will not hold him guiltless who taketh his name in vain."—Congregationalist.

ANOTHER CASE OF BRONCHITIS CURED.

BRIDGEWATER, N. S., March 2nd, 1869.

MR. JAMES I FELLOWS.

DEAR SIR: While in Windsor on a visit in December last, I fell in with an old friend —Capt. H. Cosfill—and finding him looking so hearty and robust, was led to enquire what had produced so great a change, for when I last saw him two years previous he was a shade darker. He told me that your syrup of the Hypophosphites had effected a perfect cure. He persuaded me to try the Syrup for Bronchitis, from which I had suffered much during several years. I purchased one dozen of this Syrup, and have used only three bottles, and my health is now better than it has been for years. He recommended the balance of the dozen, I sold it to different parties, and now there is a general demand for it from all parts. Respectfully yours, W. J. NELSON.

Capt. H. Cosfill is the person who was cured of Consumption in 1866 by Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites, whose letter was published some time ago.

Married ladies, under all circumstances, will find "Parsons Purgative Pills safe; and, in small doses, a mild cathartic. They cause no griping pains or cramps.

Is your throat sore, or are you annoyed by a constant cough? If so, use promptly "Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers." They will give you instant relief. They relieve air passages of phlegm or mucious, and allay inflammation, and no safer remedy can be had for coughs, colds, or any complaint of the throat or lungs, and if taken in time their efficacy will soon be proved. Sold by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cents per box.

WHY WILL YOU SUFFER.—The "Canadian Pain Destroyer" instantly and permanently removes all pain from the system, and is decidedly the best medicine known for the cure of rheumatism, pleurisy, neuralgia, toothache, tooth-ache, cholic, burns, frost bites, &c., and is so cheap that all can afford to buy it. Sold by all medicine dealers.

Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites is prescribed by the first physicians in every city and town where it has been introduced, and it is a thoroughly orthodox preparation.

Horse dealers who are supposed to know what effects their interest, purchase 'Dartagh Condition Powders and 'Arabian Heave Remedy' by the dozen and feed it to their horses for the purpose of improving their condition, which it always does—others should profit by their example—Remember the name, and see that the the signature of Read & Co. is on each package. Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle, Ont., proprietors for Canada. Sold by all medicine dealers.

Breeding Horses for Draught

So much attention seems to be now concentrated on the breeding of trotting and fast horses, that the farmers of America [illegible] a new turn in their [illegible] and the business of breeding horses of a less showy character rather than those of a useful and profitable class to themselves. Our own observation convinces us [illegible] that the general class of horses on American farms, are too light and wanting in character to profitably and efficiently perform the work required to be done to bring the soil into a high state of cultivation; or to harvest and market the crops that would be grown were a better state of culture more easily attainable. We do not advocate the introduction of the heaviest class of horses for the performance of the work required upon the farm, but only so large a proportion of the blood of the Clydesdale, Norman or Percheron horse, into the working farm horses of the country, as will give them more size, muscular substance, and endurance, without too far lowering their standard of quick action and fast gait.

A single cross of the draught class of stallions upon common mares of good speed and action, will usually result in producing colts that are just about right in these respects. But to do this with any degree of certainty we must see only stallions of undoubted purity so far as the breed is concerned to which they belong, whether Clydesdale, or Percheron. The colts produced from the cross would be of little value to use as stallions, but will make excellent farm horses, while the fillies, when old enough, if again crossed with the pure bred stallion, would bring still heavier produce, the females of which put to a first-class trotting stallion, of good size ought to produce fine road team horses. There is however always a large and increasing demand for the draught horse in its purity, for use in the cities to move large loads of heavy goods upon trucks between the warehouses of merchants and dealers and the various railways and shipping points. The kind of horses needed for this work is too heavy and sluggish for the farmer, but it would prove very profitable to many of them to engage in the business of breeding draught horses for sale.

The horse best adapted to this purpose is probably the breed known in England as "Lincolnshire," of which a very few have already found their way across the Atlantic. They are heavier than the Clydesdale or Norman, and also more tractable and powerful. Owing to their docility and even temper they are rarely gelded, and always command very high prices. Numbers of them are bred in Australia and Tasmania, where they are found in the highest state of perfection, and often exported to India, China and South America. Probably they have found their way from thence to San Francisco, Cal., before this time. Their prevailing colors are black, brown, and dark chestnut, often with white feet. They are not allowed to be shod as are ordinary horses, by having the most valuable part of the hoof ruthlessly cut away in order to give them handsome but contracted feet. Instead of that, their feet are shod with steel shoes having a sharp bevelled edge all round, and a small calk only in front. Their shoes are nailed on flat, without any paring away of the frog or sole, more than just sufficient to make the hoof level and even.—Country Gentleman.

What Sleep Will Cure.

The "Herald of Health" discourses in this style: "The cry for sleep has always been louder than the cry for food. Not that it is more important, but it is harder to get. The best rest is from sleep. Of two men, otherwise equal, the one who sleeps the best, will be the most moral, healthy and efficient. Sleep will do much to cure irritability of temper, peevishness, uneasiness. It will cure insanity. It will restore to vigor an over worked brain. It will build up and make strong a weary body. It will do much to cure dyspepsia, particularly that variety known as nervous dyspepsia. It will relieve languor and prostration felt by consumptives. It will cure hypochondria. It will cure the blues. It will cure headache. It will cure neuralgia. It will cure a broken spirit. It will cure horror. Indeed one might make a list of numerous maladies that sleep will cure.

"The cure of sleeplessness, however, is not so easy, particularly in those who carry heavy responsibilities. The habit of sleeping well is one which, if broken up for any length of time, is not easily regained. Often a severe illness treated by powerful drugs, so deranges the nervous system that sleep is never sleep—is never sweet afterward. Or, perhaps, long continued watchfulness produces the same effect; or hard study, or too little exercise of the muscular system, or tea and whisky drinking, and tobacco using. To break up the habit are required:

1st. A good clean bed. 2nd. Sufficient exercise to produce weariness, and pleasant occupation. 3rd. Good air and not too warm a room. 4th Freedom from too much care. 5th. A clean stomach. 6th. A clear conscience. 7th. Avoidance of stimulants and narcotics.

For those who are overworked, haggard, nervous, who pass sleepless nights, we commend the adoption of such habits as will secure their sleep; otherwise life will be short, and what there is of it will be sadly imperfect.

The Uses of Waste Paper.

A correspondent of the Western Rural mentions many things for which waste paper can be used with great advantage, to which we guess the following:

"Few housekeepers are aware of the many uses to which waste paper may be put. After a stove has been blackened, it can be kept looking very well for a long time by rubbing with paper every morning. Rubber boots and shoes is a much nicer way than to blacken them. A piece of a tea-kettle or coffee pot and tea-pot bright and clean, than the old way of washing them in suds. Rubbing with paper is also the best way of polishing knives and tinware after scouring. This saves wetting the knife handles. If a little flour be rubbed on the paper in polishing tinware and silver, they shine like new silver. For polishing mirrors, windows lamp chimneys, etc., paper is better than dry cloth. Preserves and pickles keep much better, if brown paper instead of cloth is tied over the jar. Canned fruit is not so apt to mold if a piece of writing paper, cut to fit the can, is put directly on the fruit. Paper is much better to put under a carpet than straw. It is warmer, thinner, and makes less noise when one walks over it. Two thicknesses of paper placed between other coverings on a bed, are as warm as a quilt. It it is necessary to step upon a chair, always lay a paper on it and thus save the paint or woodwork from damage."

WHOLESALE STARVATION.—The "Union Intelligencer," Dallas, Texas, of March 16th, reports that more than one-half the cattle in the western part of Texas, have died from starvation during the past winter. From other districts we also learn that the mortality among the cattle of Texas and southern Kansas has been very great.

IN-AND-IN BREEDING.—During a recent discussion in England, it was stated that the most successful lines of short-horns were those in which one animal was the sire of the sire and of the dam also—thus making the animals half brothers and sisters by the same sire out of different dams.—This system of breeding had produced some strong heavy cattle as the result. It was also said that where cattle were closely inbred, and preserved their constitutions, they had a tendency to lose colour, save perhaps in the ears, and to become white.

A meeting of the Association of Breeders of Thorough-bred Holstein Cattle, was held in Boston recently, at which the question of establishing a Holstein herd-book was discussed, and the expediency and desirableness of such a record fully indorsed.—A resolution was also passed to the effect that no animal shall be called a thoroughbred Holstein, "except those large improved black and white cattle imported from the provinces of North Holland, Holstein, or animals of undoubted purity of blood of said importation.

Poetry.

The End Justifies the Means

THE J. A. MACDONALD ON THE SITUATION.

"Will you you teach me, Master Shallow, how to choose a man? Care I for the limbs, the thews, the stature, bulk and big assemblance of a man? Give me the Spirit Master Shallow."—Sir John Falstaff, Henry IV.

I will have men to serve me—Organ grinders,
And multiply the race in this Dominion
By all the means in old and modern Statecraft.
Raise Joint Stock Companies, and pay the Interest
Re-well they will forget their righteousness.
See where a starving Cooperation can be bought,
And fly the [illegible] with public cash,
Until their eyes run dry with very fondness
For the great soul of excellent "Sir John I"
[illegible]
Until [illegible]
And overdo the [illegible]
The rabble [illegible] from upper levels,
I'll poison the ground [illegible] until they're yellow,
And that WILL BE the [illegible]. They must be taught
To rear in chorus with a strain, as if
The wind harp of the world had been pricked.
"The [illegible] the noble,
"The [illegible]
"The [illegible] and real sealing,
Ambi-motive, going-sideways, backwards,
"The loyalist, the Patriot!—O, Sir John P
Heavens, how the astonished grits will stare,
When all my organs play the symphony.
I hope the mercenary boys may frighten them
It cannot be that things are going badly—
Alike at times [illegible] sharp-edged thongs
Will shoot and sting these paltry common plans
And stings me With the cause—"I will Rail."
My game is old, there's nothing new or clever,
Or meaning therein it—nothing
The old stale trick of buying up the enemy:
The principle that every man has got his price.
I wish I knew Nakamiyah price, or Nisbet's,
Or certain others I could name—I'd give it,
If it [illegible]
Of the [illegible]
Still I've a [illegible]
There's [illegible] and "Hail Sir
John!"
That rises highest where his heaviest paid for,
I fear that I have reached the crisis in my fortune,
In which the inevitable change is—falling leadings:
I'd give the fish in all our lakes and creeks,
Three miles, ay, three and twenty miles from shore,
To [illegible] and I were saved.

Self-Knowledge.

At the basis of all success in life lie knowledge, education, training. If a man attempts to be a merchant, he must have an education for it must be trained for it. If a man is to be a manufacturer he must be trained for it. If a man is to be a mechanic, he must learn his art. If he is to be a professional man, he must have a preparation for it. There is no pathway in life in which a man can walk successfully without training, for though a man disciplined to business may sometimes change his occupation, it is by careful study, examination, learning the relation of things, that he becomes qualified for his business. And so, if we would walk in life's pathway successfully, and triumph over difficulties, we must be educated or trained for it.

No man can live for me, for no man is like me; and it would be very unsafe for me to take any human being for my absolute pattern. God has given me an individuality, and there are some things in which I am unlike any other individual who ever lived, or ever will live; and that I may know how such a being can be trained, how managed, and succeed best, I must study myself, my nature, my weaknesses, my defects, my peculiar liabilities to go wrong, the weak points at which I may be assailed. My friends may not know, my enemies may not know, no one may be aware of them but myself and God, but if ever I succeed, I must understand them, and I must say: "At that point I must place double guard, that point must be strengthened, I must guard against it, that impulse, if strengthened or cultivated, will lead me wrong. I must keep out of circumstances that would excite it, out of associations that would give it play. I must know myself, must train myself."

A RARE COPARTNERSHIP.—One of the best farms in Franklin County is owned and managed by two brothers, whose locks are now silvered by many years of honest labor. Their well-kept lands extend over hundreds of acres, including some of the most fertile pastures, where they gram in the summer 75 or 80 head of cattle—one of the best herds of Durhams to be found in New England. Hundreds of acres of woodland are covered with a heavy growth of timber, and instead of being pillaged and robbed by the invading ax, are increasing in value every year. Extensive orchards are in the best bearing condition, and frequently contribute over a thousand dollars to the annual income. They own a dairy of some twenty cows, and the golden butter produced is some of the best that finds it way to the Boston market. Each of these brothers has a family, and they reside in two grand old farm-houses in close proximity, beneath the spreading branches of magnificent elms. But what seems a little remarkable in this age of greed and selfishness, is that the relations of the two families are always most friendly and are in the most perfect harmony. They share everything in common. There is no division of the proceeds of their well-paying farms. Either draws for the wants of himself and family, as the occasion requires, without any particular consultation with or permission of the other. There is a confidence in and a reliance upon the integrity of each other that is as rare as it is beautiful. If a member of one household is sick, he or she is cared for as tenderly by those from the neighboring house as by those beneath the same roof. There is no finding fault because some may think they are doing more than their share of the common work. As the wife of one of the brothers is an invalid, the management of the dairy has fallen to the lot of the other, but this extra duty is discharged as a matter of course, and is the source of no unpleasantness. Each of the brothers has a son, and it is probable that the grand old farm will be transmitted to them still undivided, and that the same pleasant family relationship will be continued for another generation. We doubt if a like instance of happy copartnership can be found in the country.—Greenfield Gazette.

The only way to meet affliction is to pass through it solemnly, quietly, with humanity and faith, as the Israelites passed through the sea. Then the very waves of misery will divide, and become to us a wall on the right side and on the left, until the gulf narrows and narrows before our eyes, and we land safe on the opposite shore.—New Methodist.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The operations classified as sanitive medicines are more involved than is commonly supposed. Many of which are truly [illegible]. In consequence of heretofore discussion, the public, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been punished and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were aggravated by the unscientific recommendation until they were painfully [illegible] thing, have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this unseen and unfelt tenant of the organism undermines the constitution, and invites the attack of maladies or fatal diseases, with unerring a suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develops into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, catastrophies may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hence the occasional use of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla is advisable, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally feel immediate relief, and, in time, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Boils, Blotches, Sores, Ulcers, Pimples, Pustules, Blood Spots, Sore Eyes, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in this more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Fits, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Nervous affections of the superficial or cerebro-spinal.

Syphilitic or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are rapidly, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Ulcerative or Within, Uterine Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute Directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Torpidity, Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from the rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Lowered and Listless, Despondent, Torpid, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color

A Dressing which is [illegible] agreeable, healthful, and effectual [illegible] restoring the [illegible] faded or gray hair to [illegible] its original color with the [illegible] and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does [illegible] cambric, and yet lasts [illegible] the hair, giving it a rich glossy [illegible] beautiful perfume.

HAIR DRESSING,

Select Poetry.

"If."

If sitting with his little worn-out shoes
And scarlet stockings lying on my knee,
I keep the little foot had pattered through
The pearl-lit gates that lie 'twixt heaven and me,
I could be reconciled, and happy, too,
And look with glad eyes towards the happier sea.

If, in the morning, when the song of birds
Reminds me of a music far more sweet,
I listen for his pretty, broken words,
And for the music of his dimpled feet
I could be happy, though I heard
No answer, and but saw his vacant seat.

I could be glad, if, when the day is done,
And all its cares and heart-aches laid away,
I could look wearyward, to the hidden sun,
And, with a heart full of sweet yearning say,
"To-night I'm nearer to my little one,
By just the travel of one earthly day."

If I could know those little feet were shod
In sandals wrought of light in better lands
And that the footprints of a tender God
Ran side by side with his, in golden strands
I could bow cheerfully, and kiss the rod,
Since darling was in wiser, safer hands.

Who were dead, I would not sit to-day,
And stain with tears the wee sock on my knee,
I would be patient, knowing 'twas God's way
And that he'd lead me to him o'er death's silent sea.

But,—oh, to know the feet once pure and white,
The hands that should have battled for the right,
Have been wrung crimson in the clasp of sin,
And should he knock at Heaven's gate to-night,
To fear my boy could hardly enter in.

The Microscope as a Detective.

Some time ago, being in company with a medical man, whom I will call Mr. C., we fell into conversation on the uses of the Microscope, in the management of which he was an adept.

"Now," he said, "I will tell you a story of what happened to myself; one which I think will illustrate the importance of this instrument to society, though I was put in a very unpleasant position owing to my acquaintance with it. I have, as you know, given a great deal of attention to comparative anatomy, especially to the structure of the hair as it appears under microscopes. To the unassisted eye, indeed, all hairs appear very much alike, except as it is long or short dark or fair, straight or curly, coarse or fine. Under the microscope, however, the case is very different; the white man's is round, the negro's oval, the mouse's apparently jointed, the bat's jagged, and so on. Indeed every animal has hair of a peculiar character; and, what is more, this character varies according to the part from which it is taken—an important circumstance, as will appear from my story, which is this: I once received a letter by post, containing a few hairs, with request that I would examine them, and adding that they would be called for in a few days.—Accordingly, I submitted the hairs to microscope, when I discovered that they were from the human eyebrow, and had been bruised. I made a note to that effect, and folded it within the envelope ready for the person who sent them. In a few days a stranger called and enquired whether I had made the investigation. "Oh! yes," I said; there they are, and you will find them and their description in this envelope," handing it to him at the same time.

He expressed himself as being much obliged, and offered me a fee, which however, I inclined, telling him that I could not think of taking anything for so small a matter. It turned out however, of more consequence than I had imagined, for within a week I was served with a subopena to attend as a witness to a trial for murder. This was very disagreeable, as I have said: but there was no help for it now. The case was thus: A man had been killed by a blow from some blunt instrument on the eyebrow, and the hairs sent to me for examination had been taken from the hammer in the possession of the suspected murderer. I was put in the witness-box, and my testimony "that the hairs were from the human eyebrow and had been bruised, it was just the link in the chain of evidence which sufficed to convict the prisoner. The jury however, were not easily satisfied that my statement was worth anything and if required the solemn assurance of the judge that such a conclusion was within the reach of science to convince them that they might act upon it.

One juryman in particular—an old farmer—was very hard to satisfy.

"Does thee mean to say," said he "that thee can tell the hair of any animal!"

I answered that I would not take upon myself to assert positively that I could do so, although I believed I could.

"Well," said he, "I'll prove thee."

The prisoner, as I said, was convicted, and I went home. In a busy life of extensive practice I forgot all about my obstinate old farmer. About two years afterward, however, a person, an utter stranger to me, called on me with a few hairs screwed up in a piece of paper, which he asked me to examine and report upon.

"Is this another murder case?" I inquired; "for if so, I will have nothing to do with it. I have had enough of that sort of work."

"No—no," said he; "it is nothing of the kind. It is only a matter of curiosity which I should be very much obliged to you if you would solve; and if you will do it I will call or send for the result of your examination in a few days' time."

Having received this assurance, I undertook the investigation. When he was gone, and I had leisure, I put the hair under a microscope, and soon discovered that they were taken from the trunk of a Norway rat. Two or three days afterward as I was sitting in my room, an old farmer-looking man was ushered in.

"Well," said he, "has thee looked at the hairs?"

"Yes," I answered, "and I find that they are taken from the back of a Norway rat."

"Well," he exclaimed, "so they are."

"Thou hast forgotten me, but I have not forgotten thee. Dost thee recollect the trial of murder at L——castle. I said I would prove thee, and so I have, for those hairs came from the back of a rat's skin my son sent me from Norway."

So the old gentleman was quite satisfied with the proof to which he had put me, and I, as you may suppose, was well pleased that my skill and sagacity had stood such a queer proof as this, and more convinced than ever of the value of the microscope,

Here the doctor ended his story, which I have given, as nearly as possible, in his own words, and upon which I believe that a thorough dependence may be placed.—Journal of Microscopy

Hints on Building a Stone House.

BY DUGGAN AND CROSSMAN, ARCHITECTS.

The use of stone in building dwelling-houses finds more exponents than any other material. To the architect's question, "Of what material do you propose to build?" the reply of the client is, almost invariably, "Stone;" but a few facts concerning the cost very soon causes the owner to abandon that material, and take one less expensive. A stone house, properly built, is undoubtedly the most expensive edifice that can be erected. It has its advantages and its faults; and, unless it is carefully and thoroughly put together, the latter certainly predominate. Its two principal recommendations are its fine, substantial, and showy external appearance, and the facility with which creeping vines may be grown upon it. The building, not requiring paint, permits these vines to grow at random, producing a most desired romantic effect. It cannot be claimed that such a house is any warmer in winter, or cooler in summer, than a brick one; while in comparison with a frame house it maintains the same relation as a cast-iron stove does does to a sheet-iron stove. The one being much thicker than the other, absorbs more heat, and hence we are required to wait longer before feeling the benefit of the fire; but when once heated, it retains it much longer. The interior of a frame house changes much more readily under the influence of the outside atmosphere. We have seen the walls of the interior of a stone house in midsummer covered with moisture caused by a sudden change in the atmosphere, to a cool, clear one, causing probably a difference of ten or fifteen degrees in less than half an hour, thus producing condensation on the walls.—This could not occur in a frame building, both on account of the material of which the walls are constructed, and also of the rapidity with which the outside can affect the inside. In this case the moisture would be removed, not precipitated. The walls of a stone dwelling-house should never be constructed of rough rubble work, for the reason that it is almost impossible to thoroughly fill all the joints with mortar; the stone being rough on the face, does not allow the water to pass off freely, and the result is that, in a driving storm, a very small opening, hardly large enough to admit the small blade of a penknife, will take in a large quantity of water and produce dampness.—In the construction of churches and other buildings, not dwellings, we have often worked long and diligently to find these small crevices, to stop the flow of water. Stone naturally absorbs moisture, and that, together with any leakages that may exist, produce too much dampness for health or comfort. The proper construction for the walls of a stone dwelling is to have the beds and joints squared, (what is termed squared random-work.) This enables the workman more surely to fill the joints with mortar. All the outside joints should be thoroughly jointed with cement before the building is occupied.

A stone house can be constructed either with hollow or with solid walls. The former method we generally recommend. The outer wall should not be, less than sixteen inches thick, of stone leaving a space of three inches and backed up on the inside with four inches of brickwork, the inside and outside work to be bound together with iron ties, the same as for a brick house, only that the ties should be about fifteen inches long. If a stone house be built in this way, and the same precaution taken as described for a brick house, no fear need be entertained of dampness; but where this system of construction by hollow walls is adopted, and the inside and outside work is bound together by stones going through the whole thickness of the wall, or with binders of brick, (instead of iron,) dampness is sure to ensure. Hollow walls to be thorough and effectual must have the outside and inside work entirely separate from each other.

We have now in our recollection a case of one of the most expensive houses on the Hudson, constructed with hollow walls, the binders consisting of large stones going through the whole thickness of the walls, there being eight inches of brickwork on the inside, and eight inches of space betwen this and the outer stone-work. We were called upon to make a survey of the mansion, and to advise on the best course to pursue. The occupant and owner could not believe that the dampness came through the walls, as they were of the most substantial description of work possible, and in many places at least three feet thick. The supposition and belief was, that the wet got in at some point on the roof, and so found its way down the walls. However, on close examination and inquiry we found that the solution of the trouble lay in the fact that the walls were bound together with stones. The house had been built we believe, about ten years, so that the dampness had entirely rotted all the woodwork around the windows, and the baseboard and wainscoting to the walls, and mildewed the plastering.—The only remedy in this case was, to entirely strip off all the woodwork coming against the outer wall of the house, then to fur off, and lath and plaster the walls—an expensive remedy, but without question effective.

It is impossible to give any general direction as to the kind of stone with which to build, as this depends altogether upon the location. Different districts, of course, supply different descriptions of stone. Whatever colored stone is used for the main body of the house, it is well to select for the window-caps and sills, and the trimmings generally, a stone of a different shade, taking care not to have too great a contrast. A very pleasing effect may be produced by the use of brick for the jambs and arches to the windows and doors; it is well to have the brick painted with blue marker, so as to tone down the red color of the brick as much as possible. Care must be taken to use this brick and mortar sparingly, and with judgment. If employed with too great profusion, it will tend to give a cheap appearance; but if it be applied with discriminating taste, using in some cases springing-stones, and keystones to the arches, it will give to a house, otherwise dull and sombre, a bright and cheerful aspect.

This application of brick for the trimmings and dressings to the doors and windows has the additional recommendation that it is much less costly than stone, as the cutting for the corners and openings of a stone house is one of the principal items of cost.

To build a house of stone with great care in laying up the walls. As this is unquestionably the most thorough method of building, it is also (except in some rare cases) the most expensive, even in cases where stone is obtained for only the expense of carting; the cost of the brick for a brick house being more than counterbalanced by the additional labor required in cutting and dressing the stone, and in handling and building it into the wall.

We refer the reader to our article on "How to Build a Brick House," in the last issue of this magazine, for many other points in the construction of a stone house, the similarity in many respects being so great as not to demand repetition. In conclusion, we would advise those contemplating building of stone to do so in the most thorough manner. If the cost is too great, do not economize by building cheaply, for the sake of having a stone house. It is far better to adopt a cheaper material. A well-constructed frame house is much better and healthier than a cheap stone house. Whatever you do, in the use of any kind of building material, do thoroughly, and you will be relieved of much care and perplexity. Your enjoyment of your home will be much greater, your health promoted, and every thing which tends to give that quiet and repose for which home is chiefly valuable will be greatly increased.

Brute Wisdom.

The Dubuque, Iowa Telegraph vouches for the following singular horse story:—

On Monday evening last a man whose name we could not learn, was seen wending his way up Julien avenue leading a mare by the bridle. He was badly intoxicated, so much so that he staggered, and it was sometimes more than he could do to maintain his equilibrium. The mare kept a close watch on his movements, and whenever he came near falling would grab his collar between her teeth and hold him up. She did so no less than a dozen times in the presence of several spectators. The drunken man fell down in the street once, but no sooner had he done so than the animal grabbed the back of his coat and set him on his feet. When a little beyond McNulty's house, the owner of the mare met an acquaintance of his who was also drunk. They engaged in conversation, and while talking, bumped against each other and the man alluded to fell. He was immediately picked up by the mare, and just as soon as she had finished her job she turned round and let her heels fly in a savage manner, at the man who knocked her master down. Fortunately her heels missed the mark.

Ask My Wife.

A correspondent who has evidently been out that way, tells us the following in the Albany Argus:

Riding on horseback just at night through the woods in Saginaw county, Michigan, I came into a clearing in the midst of which stood a log house, its owner sitting at an open door smoking a pipe. Stopping my horse before him the following conversation ensued.

"Good evening, sir," said I.

"Good evening."

"Can I get a glass of milk of you to drink?"

"Well I I don't know. Ask the old woman."

By this time the wife was standing by his side.

While drinking it I asked:

"Think we are going to have a storm?"

"Well I really don't know. Ask the old woman—she can tell."

"I guess we shall get one right away," said the wife.

Again I asked:

"How much land have you got cleared here?"

"Well I really don't know. Ask the old woman—she knows."

"About nineteen acres," said she, again answering.

Just then a troop of children came running and shouting round the corner of the shanty.

"Are all those your children?" said I.

"Don't know. Ask the old woman—she knows best."

I didn't wait to hear her reply, but drew rein and left immediately.

A correspondent of "Knife and Fork" supplies the following curious information:—Permit me to say that no cheese has ever been made in the parish of Stilton, Huntingdonshire. The Leicestershire cheese, which is call-Stilton cheese, and which was sold—but not made—in Stilton during the old coaching days, was, perhaps, first made—at Little Dalby or elsewhere—in or before the year 1730.

The name of "Barometre Cameleon" is given by M. Lemoir to an instrument which may be regarded as a combination of the barometer and hygrometer. On the dial of the barometer is a paper circle divided into four sections. These are colored variously in the parts corresponding with the usual words, "fair, wet, &c., and these sections, under the changes of the atmosphere, alternately appear. This paper is prepared with deliquescent salts, chloride of cobalt, and glycerine. This is at least, ingenious.

Temperature of the Bed of Coal.

We can comprehend the formation of a bed of coal in the olden time. Let us suppose that a certain bed of coal has been completed by the growth of luxuriant plants over a low-laying tract subject to inundations from the sea. Rising ground of granite or schistose rocks in the distance defining the boundaries of a continent from which the sedimentary materials of the coal strata are derived. The growth of vegetable matter is passed, or just now a slow subsidence of the whole tract commences. The brackish waters of the estuary, and the salt waters from the ocean invaded the jungle, carrying dark mud in suspension, with floating stems of trees and fronds of ferns. Presently the mud subsides, and covers, in one uniform sheet, the accumulated vegetation of centuries. The process of subsidencence goes on while the sea currents and rivers pour into the estuary fine sand and mud, in which branches and stems from the uplands are inclined.

This process continues until the sinking of the ocean bed altogether ceases, or is counter-balanced by the rapidity with which the sediment is deposited. The basin becomes gradually shallower, and plants begin to appear, commencing perhaps at the coast, and creeping seaward until the whole basin is again overspread by a forest of huge cryptogamic trees, arborescent ferns, and conifers, with a dense undergrowth of giant grasses. These, generation after generation, flourish and die, their leaves, branches and trunks are falling around, and gradually accumulating, till the pulpy mass attains a thickness of twenty, fifty, or a hundred feet. The process completed, the basin again commences to subside, the waters run and bury the mass of thousands of centuries, stratum after stratum accumulates till the vegetation pulp is subjected to the pressure of, it may be, thousands of feet of solid matter.

Meanwhile, chemical as well as mechanical changes ensue, and in process of time what was once a torrent is changed into a bed of coal. By repetition of this process with local variations we may conceive the formation of any number of coalseams, frequently amounting in some districts, to fifty or sixty, embraced within a vertical thickness of several thousand feet of shales and sandstone. Ages roll on, the strata are removed, from their foundations; upheaved from the bottom, the breakers and currents sweep away a portion of the covering, and the coal is brought within reach of mining industry.

Anglo-Saxon Drinking Customs.

The liquors drunk by the Saxons were chiefly ale and mead; the immense quantity of honey that was then produced in this country, as we learn from Domesdy Book and other records, shows us how great must have been the consumption of the latter article. Wine was also in use, though to was an expensive article, and was in a great measure restricted to persons above the common rank.

According to Alfric's Colloquy, the merchant brought from foreign countries wine and oil; and when the scholar is asked why he does not drink wine, he says he is not rich enough to buy it, 'and wine is not the drink of children or fools, but of elders and wise men.' Our Teutonic forefathers appear to have been made acquainted with wine through the Romans, from whom the Anglo Saxons borrowed the name, their word "win," Latin "vinum," for they had no word of their own for it, and they no doubt found it here when they settled here in this island province. Afterwards it appears to have been especially in favor among the clergy.

There were vineyards in England in the times of the Saxons, and wine was made from them, but they were chiefly attached to the monastic establishments few of which were without a vineyard. William of Malmesbury speaks of a vineyard attached to his monastery, which was first planted at the beginning of the eleventh century by a Greek monk who settled there, and who spent all his time in cultivating it. But wine appears never to have been a common drink among the Anglo-Saxons, but to have been, even till a late date, a special cause of over indulgence when introduced into their feasts.

We learn from the Anglo Saxon "Chronicle" that in the year 1012, while the Danish army assembled in London, under Edric Streona, and put to death Archbishop Ælfheah, that this outrage arose partly from the excitement of drunkenness, into which they had fallen in consequence of 'wine having been thither from the south'—meaning, probably, from the vineyards cultivated in out southern counties. Various circumstances caused the cultivation of the vine to be abandoned in our island, and indeed, the quality of the wine produced here must have been far inferior to that of the Continent. Some contemporary writers inform us that the wine in England was hardly potable, and foreign wines soon began to be imported in large quantities, until in the thirteenth century they were found here in abundance.

In the time of King John the sale of wine was encouraged by royal ordinances.

In their drinking, the Anglo-Saxons had various festive ceremonies, one of which is made know to us by the popular story of the Lady Rowena and the British king. When the ale or wine was first served, the drinkers pledged each other, with certain phrases of wishing [illegible] and made [illegible] the modern [illegible] take wine with each other at table, or as people of the [illegible] Quebec, sometimes to drink the first glass to the health of the company; but among the Saxons the ceremony was accompanied by a kiss.

A Sheriff in Connecticut vouched will any man seriously doubt the possible duration of human life[illegible] I will ask first he be aware of this county one year?" This objection a special caller to Connecticut.

Sunstroke and intelligent object every intelligent object every ear surgeons. Twenty thousand stone gravestones, obelisks and monuments, huddled together in the narrow limits of a tunnel, is the extent of half a dozen cemeteries, with no available room for [illegible] Horrible!

Prophecy Reviewed.

How Read Persia, a missionary of the Church of England in Bombay, has written the following, Mar. 21, 1872. He says that he could prove that this description of the judgments which had come upon Palestine was history written in perspective by the gift of inspiration. In the text the Lord promised to bring a sword upon the mountains, the hills, the rivers and the valleys of Israel. The metaphor, implying desolation might easily be understood, and had certain

PUMPS. MACHINES

Henry Owens

Begs leave to bring to your notice once more his truly celebrated SWING and FORCE PUMPS, which have already received five Provincial First Prizes, and have hitherto met with unparalelled success. There can be no reasonable doubt now after a years trial of the superiority of this pump over all others. H. O. has purchased the sole right under four patents, for the counties of Peterborough and Victoria, and will keep a large stock on hand if possible, which he will sell at very cheap rate. He has increased his facilities for making all kinds of pumps, having lately added to his machinery a new and first-class pump boring machine. Every thing in the pump line can be furnished on the shortest notice, and Repairs carefully and promptly attended to. Parties ordering Pumps please state depth of well and all other necessary particulars.

HENRY OWENS

is again in the field with REAPERS and MOWERS, and would respectfully call the attention of Farmers to the fact that all the Reapers and Mowers he has sold during the past three years have given undeniable satisfaction. He will have on hand this year WOODS SELF-RAKE REAPER AND MOWER, CAYUGA CHIEF MOWER, AND JOHNSON'S SELF-RAKE REAPER, and any other machine of this description that may be required can be furnished by him on very short notice. Parties intending to purchase Reapers or Mowers this coming season will find it to their advantage to give their orders before the 1st day of May, as up to that date he is permitted to sell on last years prices; after the 1st of May, on account of the rise in Iron, prices of Machines will be raised about 10 per cent. Sample Machine to be seen at my shop.

Common Pumps as Cheap as Others.

HENRY OWENS gladly avails himself of this opportunity to offer his most sincere thanks to those friends who have so kindly and liberally extended their patronage to him during the past few years, and he hopes by honest and energetic attention to such orders as he may be honored with in the future, to secure a continuance of the favor he so highly prizes.

THE CROPS.—The crops in every part of this County look uncommonly well.—Of course there is not likely to be a very large Hay Crop, and there will be little Fall Wheat, as it was winter killed, but Spring Crops promise an abundant return for the labours of the husbandman.

DROWNED.—Yesterday a child of Adolphus Guiriare, of this town fell of the Bridge, near Mr. Boswell's brewery, into the River, and was drowned. She was about six years of age.

DROWNED.—On Friday the 21st Inst., in Belmont Lake, Archibald Abbott only son of Mr. Baltas Holcomb, of the Township of Belmont, in the 16th year of his age. The Funeral was on Sunday the 23rd Inst., and it was the the largest ever seen in the Township, evidencing the Sympathy of the inhabitants with the bereaved parents in their severe affliction.

DROWNED. A man named Charles Johnston, a miller in Mr Munroe's Grist Mill, Dickson's race was drowned on Friday last about six o'clock, we believe. It appears that he went to the race to wash himself, and it is thought he must have slipped and fallen in headlong was drowned. As there was a slight abrasion on the face, when found. Some think he must have been stunned by coming against something in the race, and in consequence could do nothing towards getting out. Some of the hands in the Mill shortly after the accident missed him and told Mr. Munroe who thought he had gone home, but on search being made he was found drowned. The deceased was a native of Scotland, and leaves a wife and three children.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE.—The Semi-Annual Examinations of the Collegiate Institute were held yesterday, and a number of visitors were present, manifesting an interest in all that was going on.—At the close of the examinations three prizes of the value of $10 each were presented. One to Master S. Might, of Millbrook, for general proficiency, he having secured 90 per cent in a written examination. One to Miss Macfennan, daughter of the Rev. K. Macfennan of this Town, she also was honorably spoken of as having obtained 90 per cent out of a possible 100 marks; and one to Elmer Beauvais of Montreal, who came to the Institute about two years ago, unable to speak a word of English; but his progress has been such that he has passed through the Common School Departments and is now about to be promoted to the Institute. The prizes were presented respectively by Mr. Kidd, Mr. Edwards and Mr. Stratton, after which the children sung the National Anthem, and were dismissed by Principal Dixon, until the Monday after the 16th of August. The Examinations in the other divisions of the main building are going on to-day—and those of the new building will be held to-morrow.

REFORM CONVENTION—WEST RIDING—There will be a Reform Convention in Peterboro, on Wednesday, 3rd of July, at 1 p. m. A full attendance is requested.

EAST RIDING CONVENTION.—Delegates from the different Municipalities of the East Riding of this County will meet on Saturday, July 6th, at One o'clock, to nominate a Candidate for the Riding—Promptness on the part of the Municipalities in appointing delegates will tend towards the success of the Convention, and general satisfaction in the choice of the delegates.

We call the attention of our readers to the days for the Reform Conventions for the Ridings of this County. The action taken at Keene on Tuesday, is very assuring. The Reform Party in this County are fully alive to the necessity for prompt and united action in the present contest, and are determined not to fail this time. The officers of the Central Committee are active working men—men who have the confidence of the party—men who will be found at their post. Let the Convention be well attended, and the result will tell on the Cartier Candidate.

REFORM MEETING IN KEENE,

Pursuant to a call to the Reformers of Otonabee, a very influential meeting was held at Keene, on Tuesday last. James Millar, Esq., occupied the Chair, and stated the object of the meeting to be to form a committee and make preparations for bringing forward a Candidate at the approaching Election, in the Reform interests. The people went immediately to work and appointed a President, Vice-Presidents, and a large Committee.

There were several electors of Dummer, Asphodel and Ashburnham present, who recommended that the committee then named form a Central Committee for the East Riding, and several gentlemen were named to organise other Committees.—Saturday week, 6th July, was named as the day for holding a general Convention in Ashburnham, when delegates from all the Municipalities are expected to be present, and a Candidate selected. The names of several gentlemen are already mentioned' so that there need be no alarm of Mr. Grover getting in unopposed. He is decidedly unpopular. His late vote in Parliament have alienated many of his former supporters, so that his defeat is looked upon as certain. Reformers, then, are unanimous in their determination to send a trustworthy man from the East this time, and they are sure to succeed.

The committee formed on Tuesday is a guarantee that East Peterborough will be redeemed.

WEST PETERBOROUGH.

Mr. CLUXTON the Conservative Candidate.

DIVISION IN THE CAMP.

After weeks of meetings, canvassing and wire-pulling, Sir John A., and his fatteners here, have succeeded in getting Mr. Cluxton to accept the responsibility of contesting the West Riding.

Mr. W. H. Scott was all along supposed to be the coming man, but a change was proposed in the programme, and carried. There is a little jealousy among the dictators of the Party. This it is understood was one of the causes why Mr. Scott's name was withdrawn from the meeting on Wednesday. A decision was not arrived at till late on Saturday night, immediately after which they retired to prepare for Sabbath duties by refreshing their wearied minds and bodies with a little repose.

Mr. Cluxton has accepted the Nomination of the Party, and is therefore before the public. His public acts are fair subjects for public criticism, and in due time will receive attention, no doubt—with his private acts the public has nothing to do. He is puffing himself up with the idea that he is about to "walk the course" unopposed, but he will be disappointed in this. In a few days the Reform Party will be able to name their Candidate, and then we may expect a brisk canvas. In the mean time we would warn men not to listen to the flattering words of Sir John's Candidate or Party

A Reform Convention will be held in Hill's Assembly Rooms, on the 3rd of July, when a Candidate will be nominated, and until enth we advise the friends of Reform to make no promises.

I then asked Col. Poole what he thought I had better do. He said Lieut. Burnham would not do in any longer, as he thought some of the officers had a right to take it in turn, but I had nothing to fear it would be made all right in Camp.

I spoke to Capt. Kennedy (one of the Committee) about a guarantee, he said he could not give me one. I went to Capt. Graham and was willing to[illegible] the Committee, but who to prefer to guarantee anything. After this about two weeks ago I went to Lieut. Burnham and asked what I had done. He answered, well Mr. Rackett, if that's the case, its time I was out of the Battalion.

On Monday the 17th inst., I hunted Col. Poole up and asked him if he had any objections to go with me to Lieut. Burnham's office to settle the matter, he answered no and we went. I tried every argument to induce Lieut. Burnham to[illegible] but he was firm, and refused. Going down the street with Col. Poole, I distinctly told him I could not engage again without knowing my employer. Then he asked, am I to understand, that you[illegible] I said yes. This was the last time I[illegible] that the last time I[illegible] at that time.

On Wednesday morning June 19th, I was at the Drill Shed according to order from Col. Poole, willing to carry out my agreement, having everything packed up, and still open for another year. Col. I was willing to go[illegible] my time, and asked for my expenses[illegible] I[illegible] would not[illegible] my expenses there and back, and went off. (Remember I was not a volunteer this time, as I took the precaution to take my name off the Volunteer list.) It is well known what happened[illegible]

I have only mentioned a few facts happening this year, but if it is necessary to vindicate my position, I can say more of what I had to suffer, and the bad position I was placed in the past, when Paymaster Dumont was here, by not having a proper employer and guarantee. He, Mr. Dumont, helped me through then, for which he has my best thanks.

Hoping my position will be studied carefully, and thoughtfully, by every reader of this without prejudice.

RAILWAY DISASTER.

TRENTY SEATED AND FORTY-FIVE SEVERELY BURNED.

A frightful accident occured on the Grand Trunk Railway, near Shannonville East of Belleville on Saturday. No less than 25 persons were scalded to death, and 45 persons so severely that many of these are not expected to survive. By the account we see that Mr. Robt. Roddy of this Town was on the train at the time but fortunately is not injured, as none in the first-class van suffered injury. The following account appears in the daily papers.

NAPANEE, June 22nd.—A fearful accident occured last night on the Grand Trunk Railway, one mile east of Shannonville. The Engine of No. 3 Express Train, going east, being thrown from the track, and the baggage and second class cars piling on the top, the escaping steam passing through them. Seven or eight are reported killed, and about thirty bayly injured, some fatally. A correct list of the names of the killed and wounded cannot be given yet. All the injured are now under medical attendance. Further particulars will be given soon.

FURTHER PARTICULARS.

BELLEVILLE, 22nd.—It is impossible to get sufficient information to report in full.

The engine of No. 3 train going east broke an axle near Shannonville, and the passenger cars mounted the engine.—Nearly all the injured are second class passengers. The dead and wounded are brought back to Belleville station. Nine are dead, and about forty badly scalded—many of them fatally. The engine-driver, Jack Hibbary, is killed. The wounded are all in the freight shed, and all the medical men living here are in attendance. Everything required has been furnished by the officials of the company, under the supervision of Mr. John Bell, to relieve their sufferings.

The night express went down past this place at 12-20 this morning full of passengers, empracing among the number many ministers of the English Church, en route homeward from the Synod, which has been in session at Toronto. Every thing went well until the unfortunate train reached the bridge that crossed the Shannonville River at Mill Town, about eleven miles below the Belleville station. Just at the entrance to which the engine jumped the track, carrying dismay, death and fearful torture to the scores of passengers in the forward cars. It appears that the baggage car remained on the track and telescoped the smoking car and the second class passenger car, leaving them on the top of the engine, exposed to the escaping steam from the boiler. Here the poor creatures were hopelessly penned for some time, breathing the vapory of death and suffering all the agony of immersion into a railway chaldron, of super heated water.

Mr. R. M. Roddy, an eye witness, says that he was sitting in the first-class car, immediately after the accident; he went to the second-class car, where a squad of 14 men of his, from Orillia, where, with whom he was going to Montreal; the second-class car and smoking car were telescoped, and on the locomotive, the steam from which, issuing from the windows of the cars, was so dense that he could see nothing. One after another of the scalded victims were crawling from the openings. Crowbars were instantly put in requisition by the passengers from the first-class car, all of whom escaped injury, and openings made. Many were found entangled and were extricated with the utmost difficulty, timbers having to be broken, five persons were found dead and were carried to the roadside, where the wounded lay for nearly three hours in the most fearful agony. Dr. Burdett, from Belleville, arrived at this time, and had them removed to the Pullman car, telegraphed at once for all the medical skill here, and that the freight shed be cleared, a supply of bandages and other necessary appliances, which was promptly done. On their arrival everything was promptly done to allay their sufferings. The medical men of the Town were summoned, mattresses procured, and the large freight shed turned into a temporary hospital, where the patients receive every possible attention. The medical men and their assistants are unremitting in their attentions, while the ministers of the gospel vie with each other in their zeal in the administration of their sacred office. Each and all of every denomination. The sight was one of[illegible] description, and will live long in the memory of those who witnessed it. The terrific cries of the sufferers rent the hearts of the onlookers, who made every possible effort to grant their requests for water, stimulants and food. Their contortions under the influence of the[illegible] injuries were painful to witness, while[illegible] and pronouncities of approaching dissolution were here and there heard. After the injured arrived here some of them passed away, a happy relief being afforded from their dreadful agonies. Those who were the least injured walked about swathed in bandages and conversed freely about the occurrence of the night. The express and baggage cars were forced past the broken engine, without injuring the express messenger or baggageman, but the smoking car telescoped the second-class car,—the latter going forward knocked off the safety valve of the boiler, and remained on top of the engine, allowing the steam to fill the second-class car, which was choked with passengers many of them lumbermen en route for Quebec.

The two first-class of cars and the Pullman car were comparatively uninjured, and the passengers were consequently not much shaken.

Sixty-two were conveyed to the hospitally on the[illegible] and others[illegible] to their homes. Those who were brought to this town have been[illegible] dead and others are dying every hour. Not more than one-third of the injured will live. John Hibbert, the engineer, was instantly killed and the firemen badly injured; one of his legs will have to be amputated. H. Neilson, conductor, and other train hands escaped unscathed. The wounded and[illegible] are lying crowded on mattresses on the floor of the freight shed, so much disfigured as to be unrecognizable. Five of the wounded, who were able to walk, left by the express train, at[illegible] p. m., for Toronto. The number of the dead now reads 32.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL

Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six of some of the best. Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certian fixed proporations of greater power and prodeucing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation, of this Oil a chemical change takes place, forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which prodouces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered.—Wherever applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the small of Oils which they may contain.

Wife:—Charles, the reason you have been taking whatever the storekeeper would recommend, we have always had a bottle of Pain Cure or Reliever or Pain Remedy or some such trash in the house, we have tried them over and over again.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

To Farmer Boys.

"I'm sick of hoeing in the corn,
And following the plow:
Of working hard from day noon
Till eve, with blistered hands;
No longer will I stay to mow
Or pitch the scented hay;
To the great city will I go,
Where wealth is gained by play."

Tut, tut, my man, finish up that song,
Let wisdom be your guide,
That dream of wealth may lead to wrong,
And wreck you on the tide.
Sit down with me upon this stone—
Your team will take no harm—
If we're not kings upon a throne
We're kings upon a farm.

God's healthy breezes round you blow,
His birds your music make,
And sweetest rest is yours, you know,
When night doth overtake.
The harvest will your toil repay,
Those fields of waving grain
Are growing through the sunny day
And in the Summer rain.

Men work as hard as you, in shade,
Our books and papers bent,
The work of life is easy made
Only by sweet content.
It may be news, my friend, to you,
But 'tis the truth I tell—
All work is very hard to do,
To those who do it well.

In speculation you must stand
The rough commercial shocks,
You may in safety reach the land,
You may land on the rocks.
Your pay is certain on the farm,
Though grain may not be sold,
In panics you feel no alarm—
Wheat is as good as gold.

Pick up your whip, and bid your team
Drag on the noble plow,
And do not let an idle dream
Beclowd your youthful brow,
In years to come, when children roam,
You'll take them by the arm,
And say "You'd better stay at home,
On the good old farm"

Danger from Lightning.

We have mentioned one precautionary measure adopted by the ancients. The notion that lightning does not penetrate the earth to any considerable depth, was in ancient times a wide spread one. It is still prevalent in China and Japan. The Mikadoes of Japan, according to Kampfer, retire during thunderstorms into a grotto, over which a cistern of water has been placed. The water may be designed to extinguish fire produced by the lightning; but more probably it is intended as an additional protection from electrical effects. Water is so excellent a conductor of electricity, that, under certain circumstances, a sheet of water affords almost complete protection to whatever may be below; but this does not prevent fish from being killed by lightning, as Arago has pointed out. In the year 1670, lightning fell on the Lake of Kirknits, and killed all the fish in it, so that the inhabitants of the neighborhood were enabled to fill 60 carts with the dead fish found floating on the surface of the lake. The mere depth is no protection is well known by the fact that these singular siliceous tubes, called fulgurites, which are known to be caused by the action of lightning, often penetrate the ground to a depth of thirty or forty feet. And instances have been known in which lightning has ascended from the ground to the stormcloud, instead of following the reverse course. From what these ascending lightnings spring, it is impossible to say. Here, [illegible] are can scarcely doubt that a pinnacle, [illegible] would be more than the ground, is somewhat safer than a place several stories above the ground floor. Another remarkable opinion of the ancients was the belief that the skins of seals or of snakes afford protection against lightning. The Emperor Augustus, before mentioned, used to wear seal skin dresses, under the impression that he derived safety from them. Sealskin tents are also used by the Romans as a refuge for timid persons during severe thunderstorms. In the Cevennes, Arago tells us, the shepherds are still in the habit of collecting the cast-off skins of snakes. They twist them around their hats, under the belief that they thereby secure themselves against the effects of lightning. Whether there is any real ground for this belief in the protecting effects due to sealskins and snakeskins, is not known; but there can be no doubt that the material and color of clothing are not without their importance. When the church of Bhateauneuf-les-Moutiers was struck by lightning during divine service, two of the officiating priests were severely injured while a third escaped—who alone wore vestments ornamented with silk. In the same explosion nine persons were killed, and upwards of eighty injured. But it is noteworthy that several dogs were present in the church all of which were killed. It has also been observed that dark colored animals are more liable to be struck (other circumstances being the same) than the light colored. Nay, more; dappled and piebald animals have been struck; and it has been noticed that after the storm the hair on the lighter parts has come off at the slightest touch, while the hair on the darker part has not been effected at all. It seems probable, therefore, that silk and felt clothing, and thick black cloth, afford a sort of protection, though not a very trustworthy one, to those that wear them. The notion has long been prevalent that metallic metallic articles should not be worn during a thunderstorm. There can be no doubt that large metallic masses, on or near the person, attract danger. Arago cites a very noteworthy instance of this:—On the 21st of July, 1819, while a thunderstorm was in progress, there were assembled twenty prisoners in the great hall of Biberach Jail. Amongst them stood their chief, who had been condemned to death, and was chained by the waist. A heavy stroke of lightning fell on the prison, and the chief was killed, while his companions escaped. It is not quite so clear that small metallic articles are sources of danger. The fact that, when persons have been struck, the metallic portions of their attire have been in every case affected by the lightning, affords only a presumption on this point, since it does not follow that these metallic articles have actually attracted the lightning stroke. Instances in which a metallic object has been struck, while the wearer has escaped, are more to the point, though some will be [illegible] here a protecting agency rather than the reverse. It is related by Kaufmann that a stroke of lightning once struck and fused a large [illegible] by a gaudy girl to fasten her hair, and that she was not even burned. A lady (Arago tells us) had a bracelet fused from her wrist without suffering any injury. And we frequently see in the newspapers accounts of similar escapes. If it is conceded that in these instances the metal has attracted the lightning, it will, of course, be abundantly clear that it is preferable to remove from the person all metallic objects such as watches, chains, bracelets and rings, when a thunderstorm is in progress.—Chambers Journal.

Is Father on Deck.

An [illegible] of your [illegible]t. D.—— commanded a [illegible] from Liverpool to [illegible] voyage he had [illegible] on board the ship [illegible] mostly asleep, when [illegible] of wind which [illegible] sweeping over the waters [illegible] vessel and instantly [illegible] tumbling and [illegible] was movable, and awakening the passengers to a consciousness that they were in imminent peril.

Everyone on board was alarmed and uneasy; some sprang from their berths and began to dress that they might be ready for the worst.

Captain D—— had a little girl on board just eight years old, who, of course awoke with the rest.

"What's the matter?" said the frightened child. They told her a squall had struck the ship.

"Is father on the deck?" said the little girl.

"Yes, father's on deck."

The little thing dropped herself on her pillow again without a fear, and in a few minutes was sleeping sweetly in spite of the [illegible] and waves.

Blessed child! How her confidence shames our doubt and fears, and restless, vague surmisings. She had faith in father, and no room for fear.

And how is it with us? We have our storms and troubles and temptations. We fear and tremble. What is the matter? Is it not time for us to ask, 'Is father on deck?' Father understands all about the vessel, the winds; the waves, the rocks, the storms the squalls, the tempests, 'Is Father on deck?'

Yes blessed be God! Father's on deck, for he says, 'Lo, I am with you always."

He is 'on deck,' for he has said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

Tempted, troubled, distressed and frightened soul, look up. Give to the winds thy fears. Rest in God's faithfulness and love. Cast every care upon his arm.

Too Much Regard for Money.

Why is it that frauds and breaches of trust are so common? It is mainly because there is too much deference shown for pure wealth, howsoever acquired. Many people think that if they only get money, no matter how, they will be treated with respect and deference. And it must be admitted that such view have had too much foundation in fact. Now often seen honest Poverty [illegible] noticed, on foot, while arrogant Fraud drove by in stately pride, the object of general attention, and seemingly of respect. In respect to these things, however, we think a wholesome change is taking place in public sentiment. "Is he rich" [illegible] is followed by, "How did he acquire it?" which formerly seemed satisfied with the assurance that the suitor of a marriageable daughter had plenty of money now extends its anxiety to know also whether he is or not a brute. We hope to see the [illegible] in the popular view of mere wealth which has begun, continue to go on until money, when weighed in the balance against virtue and worth, shall always be found.

HASTY CONSUMPTION CURED BY FELLOWS' HYPOPHOSPHITES.

CLARENCEAU, Northumberland, Jan. 3, 1871.
Mr. Wm. I. Fellows,

DEAR SIR: I came to this country in May, 1869. I found a country man of mine laboring under some affection of the lungs. I recommended your Syrup, tried at the Draggists [illegible] Grace, but they thought I was [illegible] at them myself. However, in April, 1870, Mr. Hodges [illegible] rapidly wasted away with every symptom of quick consumption, so that he was unable to walk across the room, having no appetite, pulse in his left side, nervous system unstrung, dry, hacking cough, &c. Fortunately I learned that your Syrup could be obtained at Mr. Dearie's in St. John's, and immediately procured some (showed one to W. H. Thompson, who ordered a supply from you at once). This was Tuesday afternoon; at night he took the prescribed dose, and in the morning he described the very results notified on the wrapper. His appetite soon began to return, and a voracious one it was, too; the dry, hacking cough changed into loose but violent attacks, finally disappearing altogether; pains left his side, his hand assumed its usual steadiness, and before he finished ten bottels his health was quite restored, and to-day not a more healthy person is to be found on our streets; and it is the opinion of, all had he not been fortunate in getting your valuable Syrup of Hypophosphites, he would be in his grave.

He happened to be in W. H. Thompson's the day your first shipment arrived, and took at once four bottles to the Labrador, which he was very anxious to do, but had no occasion to use them himself. No other medicine will he ever prescribe, recommend or give [illegible] your's.

I also recommended it to another consumptive, but had not heard from him since, as he lives in a distant part of the Island. Hoping this will give you some encouragement. I remain yours, &c., [illegible] BURRIT.

VIRTUE.—Virtue rarely passes unrecognised by the world. A few destroyed optics may fail to recognize her features, but it would be as easy to conceal the face of the sun by placing under a cloth as to hide her [illegible] features. And so is it with the "Canadian Pain Destroyer." every one who uses it, speaks in the highest terms of its virtues and pain removing qualities. For rheumatism, neuralgia, colds, cholic, cramps and summer complaints, it has no equal. For sale by Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cts. per bottle.

POOR HORSES.—There are thousands of poor horses dragging out a miserable existence; suffering from a variety of diseases rendering them almost worthless, that would be restored to a healthy condition, and a value given to them of which their owners never dreamed, would they but use the means within their reach. From one to three packages of "Dunby's Condition Powders and Arabian Egyan Remedy" will in all cases produce a satisfactory result; hundreds have testified to the fact. Remember the name, and see that the signature of Hard & Co. is on each package. Smythrop & Lyman, Newcastle, Ontario, proprietors for Canada. Sold by all medicine dealers.

Coughs and colds, when left to themselves, frequently bring on pulmonary complaints, which Anodyne Pain Destroying Cough, Consumption, but if allowed to [illegible] "Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers" are a certain remedy.—They stop the irritating cough, and prevent any disease in the throat, chest, allaying all irritations and inflammation. They are also particularly adapted for the use of singers and public speakers. Sold by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cents per box.

That iron is valuable as a medicine has long been known, but little could exceed its properties in the particular form of Peruvian Syrup that its full power over disease has been brought to light. To effect in cases of dyspepsia and debility is most salutary.

How are you feeling to-day? I'm not feeling well, bilious and sick headache, having been looking around for a box of "Parsons' Purgative Pills, but our traders are all sold out.—Country Paper.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

For the Cure of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Croup, Bronchitis, Asthma, Consumption, and Consumptive Pains.

Probably never before in the whole history of medicine has anything won so widely and so firmly upon the confidence of mankind as this remedy for the relief and cure of pulmonary complaints. Through a series of years, and among most of the nations of the earth, it has been slowly and surely winning its way to the front rank of curatives, and has now become the established antidote for pulmonary disease. Wherever it has been known it has ceased to be a mere experiment, and has become a necessity. Nor is this result to be wondered at when the remarkable cures it has effected are considered. Many of these are publicly known, and have passed into the memory of the people. Almost every community has been startled by some extraordinary manifestation of its power over the most dangerous affections of the throat and lungs. As a protection against these, and kindred complaints, which are the scourge of our climate, it should be in every household. Coughs, Colds, Croup, Bronchitis, and Consumption, in their early stages, are easily subdued by it, if it be taken according to directions. In all climates, and among all classes of people, it has proved its superiority over every other remedy for pulmonary complaints. Clergymen, actors, and public speakers find great protection from it against the hoarseness and exhaustion to which they are subject. Singers find it always relieves and often wholly removes the hoarseness which follows an unusual exertion of the vocal organs.

Nor is it in pulmonary complaints alone that this remedy has won its world-wide renown. Many of the affections of the throat, bronchial tubes, and other organs of the chest, are of a scrofulous character, and, if neglected or badly treated, are sure to undermine the constitution, and lead to the development of tubercles in the lungs. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, by its alterative action on the blood, and its specific influence upon the glandular system, is generally found to be the most effectual remedy for this class of complaints. In all cases of Throat and Lung disease, whether of a local or constitutional character, the Cherry Pectoral is always reliable and often wholly effectual.

Ayer's Ague Cure is generally found by sufferers from Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, Dysentery, or Bilious Fever, to be the only remedy that will cure them. Many of the worst cases of Chronic Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Scrofula, Erysipelas, Ulcers, Tumors, Salt Rheum, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworm, Tetter, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Sore Throat, Piles, Gout, Gravel, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Female Complaints, Consumption, and Pulmonary Complaints, are the result of Scrofula in the blood, and yield promptly to the alterative effect of this medicine. Hence it is the most economical blood purifier that can be used, because it cures the disease and expels the impurities from the system. Other medicines may relieve, but this eradicates the disease. Hence it is the only remedy that can be relied on with certainty when the public require a blood purifier.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass., and sold by all the world.

PRICE, $1.00 PER BOTTLE.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Laxative Medicine.

Perhaps no one medicine is so universally required by everybody as a cathartic, nor was ever any before so universally adopted into use. In every country and among all classes, as this mild but efficient purgative Pill. The obvious reason is, that it is a sure, safe and reliable remedy for those who have need of a cathartic. Those who have used it, know that it cures their neighbors and friends, and that what it does once it does always—that it never fails through any fault or neglect of its compounders. The thousands upon thousands of remarkable cures of the following complaints, but a few of which can be given here, are well known in every section of the country. Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates; containing neither calomel or any deleterious drug, they may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar coating preserves them ever fresh and makes them pleasant to take, while being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

They operate by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action. They remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, restoring them to regular action to health, and by correcting wherever they exist, such derangements are the first origin of disease.

Minute directions are given in the wrapper on the box, for the following complaints, which these Pills rapidly cure:—

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Listlessness, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, or Biliousness, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach and restore its healthy tone and action.

For Liver Complaints and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Dizziness, Sour Eructations, Sick Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Costiveness, Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for each case, to correct the disordered action or remove the obstructions which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but a small dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back and Loins, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. In such cases these compounds disappear.

For Dropsy and Dropsical Swellings they should be taken in large and frequent doses to produce the effect of a drastic purge.

For Suppression a large dose should be taken as it produces the desired effect by sympathy.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

Accompanied, these stimulate the stomach and bowels into healthy action, purify the blood, and invigorate the system. Hence it is often advantageous where no serious derangement exists. One who feels himself well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

Select Poetry.

MY SISTER.

BY EDNA ALICE BROWER.

Lost and forgotten as the wave that moans
Its mellow music to a lonely shore,
Is the sweet utterance of the vanished tones
That I shall hear no more.

Gone, with the violets of the April dead,
Is the still radiance of unbuttered eyes,
That once adorned my tollsome pathway shed
The light of paradise.

Yet, sometimes, o'er the fathomless abyss
Of sorrow's midday, gathered brooding o'er
Waken, with the resistless joy of other days,
A dream of years gone by.

The hollow rustle of a falling leaf—
Strange footsteps echoing in deserted ways—
Strike the complaining key-note of my grief
In the sad gamut of departed days

The tender grace that decked her like a rose
Within a cloud transfused with sunset gold,
Shines on me from remembered evenings, when
With the sweet light of old.

And often, in the holy watching hours,
The falling shadow of an Angel's wing
Bearing her absence of twilight-gartered flowers,
Sweet comfort seem to bring.

For, on the yearning anguish of my pain
The spell of her white hand a moment lies,
Cooling the fever-thirst of heart and brain,
With dew of paradise.

A Nevada Funeral.

BY MARK TWAIN.

There was a grand time over Buck Fanshaw when he died. He was a representative citizen. He had "killed his man"—not in his own quarrel, to be sure, but in the defence of a stranger beset by numbers. He had been the proprietor of a dashing helpmeet, whom he could have discarded without the formality of a divorce. He had held a high position in the fire department, and been a very Warwick in politics. When he died there was a great lamentation throughout the town, but especially in the vast bottom stratum of society.

On the inquest it was shown that Buck Fanshaw, in the delirium of a wasting typhoid fever, had taken arsenic, shot himself through the body, cut his throat, and jumped out of a four-story window and broke his neck, and after due deliberation the jury, good and tearful, but with intelligence warped by its sorrow, brought in a verdict of death "by the visitation of God." What could the world do without juries?

Prodigious preparations were made for the funeral. All the vehicles in town were hired, and all the saloons were put in mourning, all the municipal and fire company flags were hung at half mast, and all the firemen ordered to muster in uniform, and bring their machine duly draped in black.

Regretful resolutions were passed and various committees were appointed, among others, a committee of one was appointed to call on a minister—a fragile, gentle, spiritual new fledgling from an Eastern theological seminary, and as yet unacquainted with the ways of the mines.

The committee-man, 'Scotty' Briggs, made his visit.

Being admitted to his presence, he sat down before the clergyman, placed his fire hat on an unfinished manuscript sermon under the minister's nose, took from it a red silk handkerchief, wiped his brow and heaved a sigh of dismal impressiveness explanatory of his business. He choked and even shed tears, but with an effort he mastered his voice and said, in lugubrious tones:

"Are you the duck that runs the gospel mill next door?"

"Am I the—pardon me. I believe I do not understand?"

With another sigh and a half sob Scotty rejoined:

"Why, you see, we are in a bit of trouble, and the boys thought may be you'd give us a lift, if we'd tackle you—that is, if I've the rights of it and you've the head clerk of the doxology works next door."

"I am the shepherd in charge of the flock whose fold is next door."

"The which?"

"The spiritual adviser of the little company of believers whose sanctuary adjoins these premises?"

Scotty scratched his head, reflected a moment and then said:

"You rather hold over me, pard. I reckon I sent call that hand. Ante and pass the buck."

"How? I beg pardon. What did I understand you to say?"

"Well, you've rather got the bulge on me. Or may be we've both got the bulge, somehow. You don't smoke me and I don't smoke you. You see one of the boys has passed in his checks, and we want to give him a good send off, and so the thing I am on now is to rout out somebody to jerk a little chin music for us, and waltz him through handsome."

"My friend I seem to grow more and more bewildered. Your observations are wholly incomprehensible to me, cannot you simplify them someway. At first I thought I understood you, but now I grope. Would it not expedite matters if you restricted yourself to categorical enunciation of fact unclouded with shadowing sentimentalisms of metaphor and allegory?"

Another pause, and then reflection. Then Scotty said:

"I'll have to pass, I judge."

"How?"

"You've ruined me out, pard."

"I still fail to catch your meaning!"

"Why, that last load of yours to the camp for me—that's the thing. I can't neither trump nor follow suit."

The clergyman took back into his chair perplexed.

Scotty leaned his head on his hand, and gave himself up to reflection.

Presently his face came up, cartoonful but confident.

"I've got it now, so you can carry," said he. "What we want is a gospel sharp. See?"

"A what?"

"Gospel sharp, parson."

"Oh, why did you not say so before. I am a clergyman—a parson."

"Now you talk. You see my blind and swallow it like a man. Put it there."—extending a brawny paw, which closed over the minister's small hand—"I gave it a shake indicative of fraternal sympathy and fervent gratification.

"Now we are all right pard. Let's start fresh. Don't you mind me snuffing a little, becos we're in a power of trouble. You see one of the boys has gone up the flume"—

"Gone where?"

"Up the flume—throw'd up the sponge, you know."

"Yes—kicked the bucket"—

"Ah—has departed to that mysterious country from whose bourne no traveller returns."

"Return? Well, I reckon not. Why pard, he's dead."

"Yes, I understand."

"Oh, you do? Well, I thought may-be you might be getting tangled once more. Yes, you see he's dead again"—

"Again! Why, has he ever been dead before?"

"Dead before? No. Do you reckon a man has got as many lives as a cat? But, you bet, he's awful dead just now, poor old boy, and I wish I'd never seen this day. I don't know no better friend than Buck Fanshaw." I know'd him by the back; and when I know a man like him I freeze to him. You hear me. Take him all around, pard, there never was a man in the mines. No man like Buck Fanshaw. But it's all up. You know. It's all up. It ain't no use. They've scooped him."

"Scooped him?"

"Yes—death has. Well, well, well we've got to give up. Yes, indeed. It's a kind of hard world, after all, ain't it? Put the kibosh on one man, and another comes up. Take Buck Fanshaw, as I was a-saying, you couldn't rightly say he was a bully boy with a glass eye. Just spit in his face and give him room according to his strength, and it will just beautiful to see him peel and go in. He was a—he was a perfect brick. Didn't draw'd breath. Pard, he was on it. He was on it bigger than all Injianny."

"On it? On what?"

"On the shoot. On the shoulder. On the fight. Understand? He didn't give a continental—for any body. Beg your pardon, friend for coming so near saying a cuss word—but you see I'm an awful strain in this palaver, on account of having to come down and draw everything as mild. But we've got to give him up. There ain't any getting around that, don't reckon. Now, if we can't get you to help paint him—"

"Preach the funeral discourse? Assist at the obsequies?"

"Obsequies is good.—Yes. That's it; that's our little game. We are going to get up the thing regardless, you know. He was always nifty himself, and as you say for the funeral, why he'd have it so himself, you bet

PETERBOROUGH, JULY 4TH, 1872.

Editorial Items.

LITERARY.—We have received a few lines of Poetry from the post of Peterboro, Mr. J. Cosby, which we will give next week.

THE Young Irishmen's Picnic on Dominion Day in Capt. Wallis's Grove was a complete success.

THE Millbrook Lacrosse Club beat the Cobourg Club on Dominion Day in three straight games, time 25 and 26 seconds and 3 minutes respectively.

LACROSSE.—A Friendly match was played on the Cricket Ground, Ashburnham on Friday last, between the Young Canadians and Silver Star Clubs, which resulted in favor of the Young Canadians, being won in three straight games. The Young Canadians have therefore made a very good beginning, but the Silver Star may yet rival them by careful practice. The Young Canadians desire to thank the Cricket Club for their kindly permitting them to use the Cricket Ground on the occasion.

Mr. Matthews is said to be the liberal candidate for Hamilton in the new division made by Sir John A. Macdonald.

THE ELECTIONS.—Immediately after Sir John feels the pulse of the people of Peterboro, he intends issuing the writs. They are now being made out.

Mr. Mercier, M.P., of Woodville is again the nominee of the Reform party in North Victoria and certain to be elected. Mr. Joseph Gaspin is fasting his way to oppose Mr. Morrison but the work is hopeless.

NORTH ONTARIO.—Mr. John Thompson seeks re-election in this Riding. Mr. W. H. Gibbs opposes him in the Government interest. Mr. Thompson it is believed will be re-elected.

The Candidates for Montreal are Sir George Cartier, and Messrs. Ryan, and Drummond, Conservatives, and Messrs Jette, Cassidy and Hon. John Young, Liberals. The Liberal Candidates are open, upright, honest and independent character and likely to carry terror into the camp of the enemy. Many of the electors of Montreal are tired of Sir John and Sir George, and in consequence will oppose them. The cities, however, are generally conservative, and in order to be successful the greater exertion will be necessary on the part of the Liberal Candidates and their friends.

Mr. Tom Ferguson is to be opposed by a Mr. Little. Of course both are Conservatives, but Mr. Little has the name of being a respectable gentleman, while Tom Ferguson is nothing more or less than a loud, notorious for scandacity, rowdyism [illegible]. The conservatives of Simcoe will do honor to themselves in leaving Tom at home during the next five years.

THE WATCHWORD.—The visit of John A. to Plantagenet, at the present crisis is indicative of their fear and trembling, and as a dernier resort. The Master Mechanic is coming to try his hand in bringing back the West Riding, but its no use coming. Reformers are united and determined "every man to do his duty" and by a majority greater than ever, shew their detestation of the man who would sell his country for a mess of pottage.

COMMITTEES.—We give to-day a few of the committees organized in portions of the Riding, and next week hope to give the remaining ones. Success is already certain, but in order to secure an overwhelming majority, committees should meet regularly and do their work at once. The writs will be issued in a few days it is believed.

Col. Higinbotham is the Reform Candidate for North Wellington. He was nominated by acclamation.

The Cobourg World is pleased to state that it is proposed to erect a varnish factory in that Town as to supply the Canadian trade of W. Tilden Blodgett of New York, and hopes the arrangements may be brought to a successful completion.

L'AURORE.—This French weekly paper was founded in 1866, and has just received new strength by the addition of three gentlemen to its editorial staff, namely—Rev. T. Ledoux, pastor of French Baptist Church; Rev. D. Comeau of France, late pastor in Philadelphia and now Professor in the Presbyterian College; and Rev. C. A. Doudiet of Geneva, Switzerland, pastor of the French Presbyterian church, all of Montreal. Being the only French Protestant journal in America and published on strictly catholic principles, it ought to reach every Protestant French Canadian, Frenchman, Swiss or Belgian, on this Continent; every house of education where French is taught should also receive it. It contains Literature, Music, Post..., Political and General News, as well as articles on Science, &c. Address, Prospectuses, &c. Terms, $1.50 (United States $2.00) per annum, payable in advance. Address L'Aurore, Montreal, Canada.

THE Ontario Farmer for June is received and has an extensive table of contents on every subject of interest to the Farmer and Gardener.

THE New Dominion Monthly for July is also before us and has a varied and interesting table of contents very suitable for family reading.

At a meeting of the Directors of East Peterboro' and the Township of Otonabee Agricultural Societies held at Keene on Friday the 28th June, it was decided to hold the East Riding Fall Exhibition at Keene on Thursday and Friday the 10th and 11th October, next. A Committee was also appointed to make arrangements for a Plowing Match sometime during the Fall.

THE weather has been exceedingly hot during the week, the mercury rising as high as 96 degrees on Monday. The shower during Tuesday night somewhat moderated the heat here, but not to any great degree.

Mr. S. S. Peck has taken legal proceedings to compel the County Council to pay A Bigley to the Ratepayers of the southern group of townships, for the purpose of gravelling old to the Lindsay, Pontoon Falls, and Otonabee River Railroad. The hearing of the case was on Tuesday in Toronto.

DROWNED.—On Thursday evening last a little girl about 5 years old fell off the bridge on Hunter's Highway and was drowned. She was a daughter of Adolph Guerrier of this town and was out with a little boy at play when the accident happened. The Town Council should have railings placed on each side of the bridge. It is certainly in a state that should not be permitted for even a day.

WHISTLE-WING.—Mr. Calcutt's new steamer, the Whistle-Wing has made several trips to Harwood and other places on the Lake and River, very successfully. On Monday a very large number of citizens went down to Hiawatha and the Lake and returned in good time the same evening. We believe she is likely to be a great success for river trade and certainly will afford pleasure seekers a cheap way of gratifying themselves. We trust Mr. C. will receive the encouragement his enterprise deserves.

During last week, Francis Adams a son of Mr. Adams of Ashburnham while engaged at Mr. Boyd's saw mill Bobcaygeon was struck between the eyes with a splinter of wood from the circular with which he was working. It penetrated into the face, but without injuring the nose or eyes dangerously. Dr. Bonnel who attended him says that the least divergence of the stick would have caused the loss of both eyes and perhaps of life. It is only a week or so since a brother of the same boy had two or three fingers cut off with a circular saw in Cope's turning shop Ashburnham. These accidents should afford lessons of instruction to all working with or near circular saws.

THE SCHOOL BOARD.—There was no quorum of the Board on Tuesday Evening, and we are informed that there has been no quorum for months, some of the Trustees have not been present at the Board since their appointment. This is hardly as it should be.

REMOVED.—Mr. W. J. Larmour has removed to No. 6, Henthorn's Block, one door north of Fisher's Feed Store, and is now offering a Select Stock of Boots and Shoes of the Newest Styles Cheaper than any other House in Town.

MUD LAKE & PIGEON CREEK BARROW.—Mr. Tremaine wishes us to state that he has obtained a satisfactory settlement of all his claims for building and work done to the Bridges, and as some unknown friend had anonymously warned him of impending ruin. He wishes to inform said friend that he has cleared between $1,500 and $2,000 for his trouble. Not so bad we say.

THE EAST RIDING.—The Convention of Delegates will meet on Saturday at Ashburnham to name a Candidate for this Riding in the Reform interest. We trust there will be a full representation from all the townships and thus secure the man most likely to meet the wishes of the majority so as to allow of proceeding to work at once. The writs will be issued in a few days, hence the necessity of prompt action on the part of the Liberals of this county. The Government party is fully aware of all that is going on, and will, no doubt, be at work every day. Let Reformers not be caught napping, but be prepared to go to work as if determined to win and success will crown their efforts. Even Sir John A. Macdonald's presence in Peterboro cannot save the sinking ship. The delegates should be prepared to meet early and arrange all the details. Again we say let no township be unrepresented.

McDonald and Elder are clearing out the balance of their summer stock at much reduced prices. Give them a call.

PERSONAL.—Mr. and Mrs. W. Yelland, Mr. and Mrs. H. Deane, and Mr. Pengelly, all of Peterboro, left yesterday for England. We wish them a pleasant voyage and safe return.

SHEEP HALL brought some of the veritable potatoe bugs to our office yesterday. The old one has five stripes on each wing place, the young ones are not very pleasant looking creatures, and the larvæ on the under side of the leaf plucked, indicated a rate of incredible increase.

ALMOST A SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—On the Little Lake on Dominion Day, our worthy townsman Charles Cameron, Esq., while getting on his boat got on a log which rolled (as they will) causing him to lose his centre of gravity. He was precipitated into the lake, fortunately his friend rescued him, having received only a few bruises. His only sorrow was spoiling a new pair of check pants brought from the Old Country, at 11s. 3d. per yard sterling and a new coat got the day before at Macdonald and Elder's. We warn gentlemen from making too free with logs on Dominion day.

ORANGE INTELLIGENCE.—At the Semi Annual County Meeting at Keene, it was agreed to have no procession at Peterboro on the approaching 12th of July. Each district will celebrate the day in its own way. The Peterboro district will go to Lakefield and Stoney Lake. It was also agreed to invite Mr. Johnston, M.P. of Down, Ireland, to visit this town about the 18th of July, when it is expected there will be a large turn out of the brethren to do him honor. The season of the year is not suitable for men leaving haymaking, &c.; but we doubt not that there will be and immense concourse of people to meet him and hear what he may have to say to the Orangemen of this County. As soon as perfect arrangement is made we will give full information. Since the above we learn that Mr. Johnston will be here on the 21st of July.

THE GRAND TRUNK DISASTER.—Already 39 of the unfortunate creatures who were mangled at Shannonville have died, and several others are still in a critical state. Every attention and care is being given to those still alive, by the citizens of Belleville and the Sisters of Charity who went to see after the sufferers. The Company's officers too are doing all in their power to allay their sufferings, but it is to be regretted that more precaution to prevent the fearful catastrophe had not been taken, than the disaster it is believed would not have happened. A flaw in a wheel, undetected, appears to have been the cause of the sad affair. While the officer who should have tested the wheels at Belleville had not made his appointment and in consequence was a hasty examination was made by the driver only, but he poor fellow cannot now tell the result of his examination. It is also said that the rate of speed at the time was two fast for the state of the road at this place.

A contemporary shows that France has to pay equal to $1,240,000,000 to Germany, or an average of $40 for every man, woman, and child in the country. This is the amount which had to be raised by forced annual call, and all her vast resources. How much less is Canada, probably much more than a Million of dollars, besides all the loss of life and the necessary and Commonly though apparently gratuitous largely, will only probably be more than half-paid for her expenses, without including her immense loss of life.

West Riding of Peterborough

REFORM CONVENTION.

JOHN BERTRAM, ESQ.

The Nominee of the Convention.

According to announcement, a meeting of delegates to nominate a Candidate for the West Riding of this County, was held in Hill's Music Hall.

Mr. Walton, Warden of the County was called to the Chair in the absence of Mr. Dumble, Chairman of the Reform Central Committee.

Mr. Walton briefly explained the object of the Convention, namely, to nominate a Candidate to represent the Reformers in the House of Commons, but before proceeding to do so, Mr. Fairbairn M.P.P. was called to address the Convention which he did, pointing out the state of political feeling in this country, and the means that are used to retain the confidence of affairs at Ottawa, in a few well selected words.

Mr. Dumble in the meantime arrived, and at Mr. Walton's request took the Chair. He then called on the Convention to nominate a candidate.

Wm. Hall, Esq., then in a very happy manner nominated John Bertram, Esq., as the Candidate of the Reform party in the approaching contest.

Edward Kerr, Esq., of South Monaghan, seconded the nomination, which was carried unanimously amidst loud cheers.

Gentlemen were deputed to wait on Mr. Bertram and signify to him the result of the meeting.

Mr. Bertram on entering the Music Hall was received with loud cheers, and the chairman announced to him that the choice—the unanimous choice—of the Convention had fallen on him, and the people were awaiting his decision. Mr. P. then referred to the contest of the past in which Reformers had battled for principles that were just and good but were denied the people by a dominant party. The principles of the Reform Party were his principles, they had been his, and he hoped to maintain them in the contest. The choice of the Reform party had fallen on him by surprise and contrary to his desire, but inasmuch as it had done so unanimously he would not shrink from the responsibility it entailed. He would accept it in the spirit in which it had been offered, and [illegible] to bring to fruition the hopes of the party—viz, success in the contest.

His acceptance of the nomination was received with continued applause, and over two hundred names were at once put to a requisition to him promising him their united efforts to elect him.

Those Qualifications!

The Government Organ has given the qualification of his Candidate in the last issue. He sums them up somewhat as follows:—Long residence in the Riding; has been in business and succeeded; never drove the poor man's cow from his door; and has ample means. The latter, not the least in the catalogue.

Without saying a word against Mr. Clarkson as a Gentleman, some are beginning to think long residence too often against rather than in favour of a Candidate, and they are not very far astray. How many business men would make good Legislators! Not one in a thousand. Making Laws and Measuring Cotton differ as much as the moon does from Green Cheese. He may be able to tell how many inches constitute a yard, or what per cent. on goods would be a living profit with a balance sufficient to secure "Ample means" but he must leave the Electors to judge of his fitness for legislating, and we are certain they will elect him to remain in business. As to his third qualification, perhaps the Constable does for him now and then, what he would not do for himself.

That Mr. C. possesses "ample means" is no doubt his chief qualification for being selected as Standard Bearer to the Knight of Kingston. By "ample means" John A. has retained power and seeks to retain it, and those who learn politics in that School believe in the potency of gold and silver arguments.

Up to the date of the Toronto Convention, Mr. W. H. Scott was looked upon as the coming candidate, but the Convention decided that money considerations are stronger in election times than personal qualifications or political principles, they cast aside Mr. Scott and selected as their standard bearer a gentleman likely to bleed freely to secure the end of his ambition—a seat in Parliament.

How utterly childish to talk of residence even for a century, as fitting a man for parliamentary duties. Business or genial good natured qualities may be admired in private life, but very rarely are good qualifications for law-making; and a man may be as rich as Croesus, yet unfit to frame a single bill or to be the exponent of political principles.

We have looked for Mr. Clarkson's address in vain and until we see it must delay referring to his principles.

Dual Representation.

A portion of the Government Press is glorying over the [illegible] which has taken place at Ottawa, but especially over Mr. Costigan's Bill, which was directed against two members for Ontario, and only two, Messrs. Blake and MacKenzie. They really must have very little to glory over. The Legislature who can so far forget and demean themselves as to pass a law that can only affect the Leaders of the Opposition should be held in utter contempt—and this the more in Ontario, as in this case it affects the leaders from this province only. What must be the sentiments of nine tenths of the Conservative [illegible] of passing an Act that would affect but two citizens of the State, and those men of unbounded chivalry and undeniable ability! What small souls they must have had who could [illegible] a Bill to affect only the Leaders of the Opposition! How much must they be afraid of the men whom they dare not openly [illegible] to Ottawa to oppose them! But the Electors of Ontario will understand this full well, and they must in equity, [illegible] upon whose ears [illegible] the [illegible] of John A. and Sir George Cartier, [illegible] the [illegible] of Costigan and Co. With unconsciousness of their own decision, and the baffled conspirators instantly fled to Toronto the fresh orders from the notorious Railway Ring that puts these puppets in motion.

Here for the present the matter rests. Whether the Toronto Railway Ring will endeavour by means of the Queen's Bench to compel the County Council to submit the by law required to be done. But of this the "Ring" and its tools and coadjutors may be certain—that the people whose rights have been outraged, and whose municipal privileges have been outraged, will upon all occasions resist to the utmost and in every possible manner any attempt of the "Ring" to carry into force a law that is a disgrace to our Legislature, and a blot upon the statutes of our country.—Belleville Intelligencer.

JAPANESE GUESS.—The Japanese ambassadors in Washington are [illegible] an excellent impression upon the [illegible] they meet, and learn the economy of the land all into the general results of cultivated American society very [illegible]. A correspondent of a New York paper [illegible] and the pleasure, [illegible] he considered of playing croquet with three of them, for they have come to understand the [illegible] games as well as Ah Sin, from a dozen [illegible] did cooling. They are reported to be quite pretty and grounded in [illegible] ways, and they take kindly to [illegible] dress, while they are [illegible] with an [illegible] effect on the best [illegible] Fifth Avenue belle, though some [illegible] was manifested at first, they have been quite up to appear with [illegible] pole out, as the right way. They are not princesses, but daughters of the nobility, and are now under the direct charge of Mr. Mori, chief of the [illegible], who also has had to be summoned to preserve discipline among them. The American habit of stairing gives them a great deal of trouble, and is an impertinence which they are never guilty of, their manners in general being unexceptionable. Their English is very good, considering the time they have spent upon it, though they think that Americans talk very fast; but have a great many Chaldee words in use. On the whole, the prospect is that, when their education is completed, in ten years from now, they will compare favorably with their Caucasian sisters, and prove the experiment a success.

Affray In Port Hope.

A great deal of excitement was caused in Port Hope by the shooting of Mr. H. H. Read, Auctioneer, at the [illegible] Hotel on Saturday night, by a man named M. H. Hayman, a [illegible] peddlar. It appears there was some dispute between the parties as to the amount charged on some [illegible] sold, which led to blows; when Hayman pulled out a revolver and fired two shots at Mr. Read, both balls taking effect, one in the left breast near the heart, and the other near the kidneys, where they still remain. Mr. Read has in a critical state. Hayman was immediately arrested, and after a preliminary examination, was taken to Cobourg Gaol to await his trial.

THE CASE BEING ADJOURNED.—A short time ago, the printers of Toronto, many of them strong [illegible] struck for the hours, time, or strike. The Leader at once espoused their cause: and as the champion of the workingmen's rights, became a born sight of. Last week however, the message came of the Montreal Telegraph Company to Toronto, [illegible] and [illegible] was to be [illegible] their "cause" at once. You see they have no votes, while the bulk of the [illegible] have. And so this old [illegible] [illegible] and his [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] from whence he expects wealth, and is favouring the [illegible] printers that [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. Yes; as workmen [illegible] [illegible] to change [illegible] [illegible] with which to pay his [illegible] [illegible] other hours had [illegible] payment in [illegible] [illegible].—Ex.

THE [illegible]

BY BRET HARTE.

The following beautiful lines will rather surprise those who only know Bret Harte as a mere irresistibly comic humor.

As I stand by the cross on the lone mountain crest,
Looking over the settlement's roofs,
In the gloom of the mountain a ship lies at rest,
And one sails away on from the lee,
One spreads its white wings to the breeze,
One [illegible] stands,
With pennant and sheet flowing free,
One hides in the shadow with sails laid aback
The ship that is waiting for me.

But lo! In the distance the clouds break away,
The Gate's glowing portals I see,
And I hear from the outgoing ships in the bay
The song of sailors in glee,
So I think of the luminous footprints that lead
The comfort o'er dark [illegible]
And wait for the signal to go the above,
To that ship that is waiting for me.

Agricultural.

Utilising Straw for Fodder.

James A. Whitney read the following paper at the last meeting of the Farmers' Club of the American Institute, on the above subject:

In American farming, oat straw, especially when cut somewhat green and kept in bright condition, is fed to stock with but little loss, but wheat and [illegible] barley straw are mainly used for bedding, and thus practically wasted, for sawdust, forest leaves, &c., [illegible] nothing, could be readily substituted for such uses.

The English, farther advanced than we in the utilization of [illegible] and the present season, when the hay crop is passed in most localities, is of interest to the subject, some of their methods [illegible] practically [illegible] But in considering these we must remember that [illegible] between the moist summers of England and the dry harvest periods of this country, which doubtless makes much difference in the condition of the straw, and also that greater [illegible] and the large farms of an English tenant will be difficult to carry out on the smaller acreage of many American homesteads. Modifications must therefore be made in the [illegible] farmer will need to exercise his own judgment with [illegible]

It is found by the time [illegible] to cut the straw into [illegible] is fit to be stored abroad, the cutting being very fine—from three-sixteenths to three-eighths of an inch in length. This is done instead of being fed at once, is kept for some months in bulk in dry barns prepared for the purpose, and from the moisture contained in it at the time of storing, undergoes a slight change which renders it more palatable to cattle. To extend this limited fermentation [illegible] during many years (since in [illegible] use) is the object of the [illegible] improvements to which the present paper more especially refers. This consists in mingling with the straw about five per [illegible] portions of salt, and then by [illegible] mass, causing the flavor of the preserved forage to be communicated to the dry, and the nutritive elements of the latter to [illegible] more palatable and [illegible] this [illegible] The [illegible] on a large scale and is recommended by Prof. Voelcker, chemist to the Royal Agricultural Society of England. The modus operandi is as follows:

Loose straw [illegible] is fed with a steam driven thresher that the straw, after the separation of the grain, passes direct to the cutter and is converted into chaff. Before entering the cutter, however, the green stuff (for example, rye cut before [illegible] leaves formed) is added to it at the rate of 100 pounds for the ton of straw, and bushel of salt to the quantity of straw is sprinkled in. The chaff falls into sacks in which it is carried to the place of storage, where it is left for a number of weeks without feeding. The expense of cutting and storing it should not exceed a shilling, or twenty-five cents for the product of an acre. But here the cost would be mere, not only because of the higher rates of labor, but for the reason that the English trials were made on a farm of 4,300 acres, which permitted the use of a twelve horse-power steam engine, and all the economy resulting from the use of the best machinery.

Boiled feed of any kind, poured hot upon this prepared chaff is found to give excellent results, and by the use in connection therewith of oilcake, corn meal, or other concentrated food, the real nutritive value may be made to equal or exceed that of the best meadow hay or [illegible] For this purpose ground cotton seed cake has been found especially efficacious, used in the proportion of two hundred weight to the ton of steamed straw-chaff. The avidity with which cattle consume this prepared fodder, arising from the delicat flavor given it by the [illegible] greatly increases its value as compared with ordinary cut straw, to say nothing of the greater ease with which its elements of nutrition are assimilated in the process of digestion.

Green-corn fodder, unknown in England, would [illegible] to [illegible] rye for mixing with the cut straw, owing to the greater quantity of saccharine matter it contains, but green oats or the aftermath of clover or meadow grasses would be well adapted to the purpose. The chief obstacle to the immediate adoption of the method in many parts of the country will be found in the practice of deferring the threshing until winter, when green forage is not at hand, but in many [illegible] or reaped carrots, turnips, sugar beets, and the like might perhaps be substituted for the green forage, although [illegible] corn would be less assured of the [illegible] than with the succulent material, [illegible] cough [illegible] In the [illegible] where threshing is done in the [illegible] nothing but the need of suitable machinery need stand in the way of the most extensive tests of a method of utilizing [illegible] which [illegible] which checked [illegible] process, and which [illegible] [illegible] fruitless in theory.

Mr. John Sellers, of Gloucester, prints for the Government the blank forms for electric telegraph messages, and has to issue weekly 300,000 copies—that is 1,200,000 monthly, and 15,600,000 in the year; and the [illegible] involves the use of 42 [illegible] of the twelvemonth. This paper is a strange composite, it is made of palm leaves, Esparto grass, and bright cut straw.

The Best That I Can.

"I cannot do much," said a little star,
"To make this dark world bright,
And the tiniest beam must struggle far
Through the folding gloom of night
But I'm only a part of our Maker's plan,
And I'll do it all, do the best I can."

"What is the matter," said a dewy cloud,
"Of whom I've heard and read?
They will hardly heed the big proud,
Though caught in her cup of gold.
Yet I am a part of our Maker's plan,
So my treasure I'll give as well as I can."

A child went thrifty fields to play,
Rain-drenched, sun-kissed, with all unaware,
Kept watching in each day's display
Through the hopping mill's head,
Her mother said: "Darling, do all you can
For you are a part of the Maker's great plan."

Like a new star upon the glancing star,
Like a dewy cloud in the sunshine full,
How, why, and the with few message things
Was, was,
She was only a child at school,
But she thought, "I'm a part of our Maker's plan
That even I should do all that I can."

She helped a younger child along,
With her road was rough to the feet,
And sang from her heart with song,
Time to through all pleasing sweet;
And also in sun, & Friday, toil-worn man,
Said, it will the blessing the best that I can."

Choice Literature.

WILLIAM HAVERLY.

About thirty years ago, said Judge P——, I stepped into a bookstore in Cincinnati in search of some books that I wanted. While there, a little ragged boy, not over twelve years of age, came in and enquired for a geography.

"Plenty of them," said the salesman.

"How much do they cost?"

"One dollar my lad."

The little fellow drew back in dismay; and taking his hand out of his pocket he commenced to count some pennies and little silver pieces that he held till they were damp with sweat. Three or four times he counted them, at last, looking up and saying:

"I didn't know they were so much," he turned to go out, and even opened the door, but closed it again and came back. "I have only got sixty-two cents," said he; "you couldn't let me have a geography and wait a little while for the rest of the money?"

How eagerly his little bright eyes blinked up for the answer. And how he seemed to shrink within his ragged clothes when the man, not very kindly, told him he could not do it.

The disappointed little fellow turned up his jacket with a very few cents in the folds, and then left the store. He looked hard and pitied him.

"And what now?" I asked kindly.

"Try another place, sir."

"Shall I go and tell you how you succeed?" I asked.

"If you, if you like," said he with surprise.

Four different stores I entered with him, though none of them knew that we came together, and each time he was refused.

"Will you try again?" I asked him as we left the fourth one.

"Yes, sir, I shall try them all, or I should not know whether I could get one or not.

We entered the fifth store, and the little fellow walked up manfully, and told the gentleman exactly what he wanted, and how much money he had.

"Do you want the book very much?" asked the proprietor.

"Yes, sir; very much."

"Why do you want it so very, very much?"

"To study, sir. I can't go to school but I study when I can, at home. All the boys have got one and they will get ahead of me. Father, my father was a soldier and I want to know about the places where he used to be."

"And does he not go to those places now?"

"He is dead," said the boy softly. Then he added after a while: "I am going to be a sailor too."

"Are you though?" asked the gentleman, raising his eyes curiously.

"Yes, if I live."

"Well, my lad, I'll tell you what I will do; I will let you have a new geography, and you can pay me the remainder of the money when you can, or I will let you have one that is not new for fifty cents."

"Are the leaves all in it, and just like the others; only not new?"

"Yes, sir, just like the new ones."

"It will just do as well then, and I will have eleven cents towards buying another book. I am glad they did not put the leaf any of the other places."

The bookseller looked up enquiringly, could tell from what a load been to the little fellow. He counted which pleased and when he brought the book I saw a nice new pencil and some clean white paper in it.

"A present, my lad, for your perseverance. Always learn to charge like that, and you will make your mark."

"Thank you, sir. You are very good."

"What is your name?"

"Wm. Haverly, sir."

"Do you want any more books?" I now asked him.

"Mine them I can over again," replied he with a quizzical glance at the books that were left.

"I will be pleased to have you call at my store and get some more books," said the gentleman, with a pleasant look in his eyes.

"Oh, I hope I may! I must tell it?"

"Stop, my lad, one thing more."

"Stop, I'll buy one book for mother," said he, "I thank you very much, and I will be sure to call and see you when I come to Cincinnati. Father used to say I was a good boy, and I will try to be one. Father, my father, I am coming, I am coming, I am coming!" and he was gone.

Just one year I went to Europe on one of the Cunard steamers that was plying between Liverpool and Boston.

We had been out about a week, when one night, after I had retired to my state room, I was awakened by the cry of fire! fire! fire! rushing on deck, I found the vessel in a perfect blaze from stem to stern. The passengers were rushing to and fro in the wildest confusion, and the cries of the women and children were heart-rending. The captain was on the bridge, and his voice could be heard above the confusion, ordering the boats to be lowered. I found my way to the bridge, and asked the captain if I could be of any assistance to him. He replied that I could, and requested me to keep the passengers from crowding the boats, and to see that the women and children were first provided for. I succeeded in getting them into the boats, and then went to the captain for further orders. He told me to get into the boat myself, as the vessel was liable to explode at any moment. I refused to do so, telling him that I would stay by the vessel as long as he remained on board. He then told me to get into the boat, and he would follow me. I did so, and we pushed off from the vessel, which was now a mass of flames. We had not gone more than a hundred yards when the vessel exploded, and sank with a hissing noise. We remained by the wreck for some time, picking up those who were floating on pieces of the wreck, and then pulled for Boston, which we reached in safety.

The captain and I became fast friends, and he frequently visited me at my house in Cincinnati. One day, about a year after the wreck, he called on me, and in the course of conversation asked me if I knew a boy named William Haverly. I told him that I was not aware that I knew any such person. He then told me that he had taken a boy of that name from the wreck, and that he had been a great favorite with the passengers and crew during the voyage. He had left the vessel at Liverpool, and he had not heard of him since. He described the boy, and I knew at once that it was the same boy I had met in the bookstore. I told the captain so, and he was delighted to hear that the boy was doing well. He said that he had no children of his own, and that he would like to adopt Haverly as his son. I told him that I thought it would be a good thing for the boy, and that I would see him and speak to him about it. I did so, and found that he was willing to go with the captain. The captain then went to Liverpool, and had the boy's name changed to his own, and he became his heir. He died about two years ago, and left Haverly a large fortune. Haverly is now a member of Congress, and is one of the most influential men in the House. He is also a director in several railroads, and is worth over a million of dollars.

"Judge P——, do you recognize me?"

I told him that I was not aware that I knew any such person. He then told me his story.

"You saw me years ago in Cincinnati. Do you remember the boy in search of a geography?"

"Very well, Mr. Wm. Haverly."

"I am glad to," said he. "God bless you!"

"And God bless persevering Captain Haverly."

Stephen Allen's Pocket Piece.

In the pocketbook of Hon. Stephen Allen, late Mayor of New York, was found a printed slip of paper, of which the following is a copy. It is worthy to be put in every newspaper and being engraved on every young man's heart:—

Make few promises.
Always speak the truth.
Never speak evil of any one.
Keep your own secrets.
Never lose a chance.
Use no kind of intoxicating liquors.
Good character is above all things else.
Never borrow if you possibly can help it.
Do not marry until you are able to support a family.
Be sure you would be happy.
When you speak to a person look him in the face.
Make no haste to be rich if you would prosper.
Live within your income.
Save when you are young to spend when you are old.
Avoid temptation, through fear you may not withstand it.
Never run into debt unless you see a way to get out again.
Small and steady gains give competency with a tranquil mind.
Good company and good conversation are the sinews of virtue.
Your character cannot be essentially injured except by your own acts.
If you have an enemy, do him no injury.
When you retire to bed think over what you have been doing during the day.
Never be idle, if your hands can't be employed in business, employ them in something useful.
Read the Bible daily and thoughtfully at least once every week.

Show Thyself a Man.

Now there are two courses, either of which you can take. One is to say,—"I am not living or dressing as well as my companions, and I must have fine clothes and better fare."

The other is to say, with stern manliness here to me by my; I should not live any higher than myself can earn the means of living. I will make what I take; and what I make and take shall support me."

The discipline which you get from this [illegible] self-denial is better than going to college. Many a man cradled in learning gets no discipline; but a young man who, having been reared and trained in self-indulgence, leaves his father's and comes to the city and says,—"I will be beholden to no man; I can afford to live in [illegible] my habits in regard to diet and clothes, if it is [illegible] I will have [illegible] I'll be [illegible]

Such a young man gets a discipline which is worth a university education. By forming that purpose and adhering to it, he is educating himself in the very highest sense of manhood. He is making a man of himself.

Do you suppose men think less of you because you dress plainly? Do you think your changes in life [illegible] feel ashamed to show a man where you room is, and where you sleep? Why many a [illegible] would be better [illegible] sions and [illegible] be ashamed [illegible] not do so [illegible] merica, [illegible] bility her [illegible] they are poor. The young man [illegible] himself and says, "I am not so poor as you take me to be." Even sensible people yield to the temptation of the devil and are ashamed to acknowledge that they work.

Whitefield and the Execution.

During one of the visits which the Rev. George Whitefield paid to Edinburgh an unhappy man who had forfeited his life to the offended laws of his country was executed in that neighborhood. Mr. W. mingled with the crowd that was collected on the occasion, and was struck with the solemnity and decorum which were observable on so awful an occasion. His sympathies, however, drew the eyes of all upon him, and raised a variety of opinions as to the motives which indeed him to join the multitude. The next day, being sunday, he preached to a very large congregation in a field near the city, and, in the course of his sermon, he averted to to the scenes of the preceding day. "I know," said he, "that many of you will [illegible] disposition of mind, especially [illegible] many [illegible] of you. Stephen Allen's Pocket Piece.

In the pocketbook of Hon. Stephen Allen, late Mayor of New York, was found a printed slip of paper, of which the following is a copy. It is worthy to be put in every newspaper and being engraved on every young man's heart:—

Make few promises.
Always speak the truth.
Never speak evil of any one.
Keep your own secrets.
Never lose a chance.
Use no kind of intoxicating liquors.
Good character is above all things else.
Never borrow if you possibly can help it.
Do not marry until you are able to support a family.
Be sure you would be happy.
When you speak to a person look him in the face.
Make no haste to be rich if you would prosper.
Live within your income.
Save when you are young to spend when you are old.
Avoid temptation, through fear you may not withstand it.
Never run into debt unless you see a way to get out again.
Small and steady gains give competency with a tranquil mind.
Good company and good conversation are the sinews of virtue.
Your character cannot be essentially injured except by your own acts.
If you have an enemy, do him no injury.
When you retire to bed think over what you have been doing during the day.
Never be idle, if your hands can't be employed in business, employ them in something useful.
Read the Bible daily and thoughtfully at least once every week.

Show Thyself a Man.

Now there are two courses, either of which you can take. One is to say,—"I am not living or dressing as well as my companions, and I must have fine clothes and better fare."

The other is to say, with stern manliness here to me by my; I should not live any higher than myself can earn the means of living. I will make what I take; and what I make and take shall support me."

The discipline which you get from this [illegible] self-denial is better than going to college. Many a man cradled in learning gets no discipline; but a young man who, having been reared and trained in self-indulgence, leaves his father's and comes to the city and says,—"I will be beholden to no man; I can afford to live in [illegible] my habits in regard to diet and clothes, if it is [illegible] I will have [illegible] I'll be [illegible]

Such a young man gets a discipline which is worth a university education. By forming that purpose and adhering to it, he is educating himself in the very highest sense of manhood. He is making a man of himself.

Do you suppose men think less of you because you dress plainly? Do you think your changes in life [illegible] feel ashamed to show a man where you room is, and where you sleep? Why many a [illegible] would be better [illegible] sions and [illegible] be ashamed [illegible] not do so [illegible] merica, [illegible] bility her [illegible] they are poor. The young man [illegible] himself and says, "I am not so poor as you take me to be." Even sensible people yield to the temptation of the devil and are ashamed to acknowledge that they work.

A poet has forwarded to us this modern prayer:—

"Teach me to seen to another's faults,
To hide the good I see,
To cast upon some other's back
The blame that's due to me."

A maiden lady who has once been jilted wrote her own epitaph as follows,

Here lies the body of one
Who died of constancy alone,
Stranger, advance with steps courageous,
For the disease is not contagious."

Some admirer of the beautiful in language and sentiment tunes his lyre and sings:—

Come into the garden, Maud,
With a brickbat and a stone,
Here's the biggest cat you ever saw'd
A gnawin' a chicken bone,
Run like the mischief, Maud,
I'm here with the best alone.

Here is the most dog-gond affectionate sample of anatory poetry that we have ever seen:—

When old Cairo sits in Sally's chair,
O, don't I wish that I was there.
When her fairy fingers pat his head,
O, can't I wish 'twas me instead,
When Sally's arms his neck imprison,
O, don't I wish my neck was his'n,
When Sally kisses Cario's nose,
O, don't I wish that I were those.

A poor shoemaker who made a princely fortune by the sale of an extensively advertised shoe string of his own invention, wrote this stanza, which now adorns his crest:

If you are wise and wish to rise,
Then pitch right in and advertise,
If you are not, then right down not,
And let your business go to pot.

MUSICAL TIDBITS.—The June number of this excellent periodical devoted to music and kindred literature, is on our Table. In addition to the Tidbits part of this number, there is the popular piece "Naughty Nell," and the "Caterpillar Waltz." The Musical Times is published by J. P. Shaw Rochester, and is only $1 a year.

MORE AN IMPROVEMENT.—We learn that crowds of young boys and young men too, are in the habit of going down the river on Sundays into the neighbourhood of residences, and there swearing, playing games, bathing, exposing themselves, &c., &c. This part of thing should be stopped and the best way to do so is to have the guilty parties brought before a Magistrate and fined for their conduct. The fouled this is done the better.

On Saturday last Mr. Carroll, Pastor of the Baptist Church in this Town, left for a visit to his native land. On the occasion of his departure several of his friends collected and presented him with a purse containing $110 as a small token of their esteem for him, and a desire that the trip may conduce to invigorate him to pursue with renewed energy the great work to which he has devoted his life.

The Dominion Telegraph Office in this Town will open for business on Monday last in Mr. Everett's Shop, Simcoe St.

To William Hall, Esq., and others.

GENTLEMEN,—Youre requisition asking me to become a candidate for Election to the Dominion Parliament is so largely signed by Electors from all parts of the Riding, that I feel it my duty to place myself at your service, by accepting the candidature. I thank you, gentlemen, for your confidence in my integrity, patriotism, and loyalty. Such ability as I have, if elected, I will exercise in the consideration of the legislation brought up in Parliament, voting for good measures irrespective of the party advancing them.

My love for the Country, which affords us so good a home, will compel me at all times to endeavor to protect the liberties of the people and the rights of all classes without distinction while it will be my aim to preserve unsullied the honor of the Country and the integrity of her soil and rights.

British connection I deem honorable, and necessary for our highest prosperity. In matters of trade I wish to see the utmost freedom prevail.

I condemn the granting of public lands en bloc to individuals or corporations, for any purpose whatever.

I wish to see the strictest parliamentary control over the public expenditure.

I desire to see a pure election law, and a measure to secure the independence of parliament.

The present Government, under the Hon. Sir John A. McDonald, does not possess my confidence, and while I will support such good measures as may emanate from it, I will yet feel it my duty when called on, to vote in it, want of confidence.

While I believe that we should have a liberal railway policy to develope the resources of the country, I am of opinion that the present Government has failed to prevent reckless expenditures and to insist on such economy and exercise of skill and judgement in location of railways, as will secure the greatest benefit at the smallest cost, at all times keeping our expenses so low as to cause the burden of taxation to fall lightly on the people, thus immigrants to our country and securing contentment and happiness amongst our people.

Trusting to have many opportunities in the canvass of more fully explaining my views,

I am, Gentlemen,
Your obedient Servant,
JOHN BERTRAM.

THE EAST RIDING.

Affairs in the East Riding appear very hopeful. On Saturday a Candidate was selected and a better choice could hardly be made. E. Ingram, Esq., is a gentleman of unblemished character. Even his enemies cannot cast a word of reproach against him. He is also well known, having been long in the Township and County Councils, and had the honor of being Warden. His political principles are in full accord with the great Reform party of the Dominion, and hence if elected he will be found on the right side in all divisions on important questions. The choice of the Convention being made unanimously he will receive a very large vote of all classes of the electors. He is a fluent speaker, is well versed in the political questions that agitate the Dominion, and being of unquestioned probity will be an honor to his party and to the County.

The other Candidates had each his strong points, all popular, intelligent gentlemen, respected in their respective neighborhoods, well known in the Townships and good and true men; their active support must prove of great value to Mr. Ingram in his canvass and at the polls.

None of the Candidates were solicitous of the nomination. Messrs. Miller and Choate only allowing their names to be mentioned that the Reform Party might not be without a standard bearer. Mr. Anderson and Mr. Ingram both agreed to support the choice of the convention, and to go in for supporting the strongest man. Mr. Miller, too, was especially anxious that the choice of the convention should be another than himself, and expressed his pleasure when the result was announced. We may the above look for the best of good feeling and active co-operation in battling against the tyranny of Sir John A. Macdonald.

A NEW BIDDER.

Sir John appears bold, similar to the [illegible] of Napoleon.

Our [illegible] are asked to [illegible] that have been in our office [illegible] called the Auction. The [illegible] were discarded with their [illegible] and wages and made to [illegible] of school from their employers shorter hours and better pay.

In all such cases of [illegible] existence, angry discussion is a consequence of debate between the employer and employed. But with an entirely novel system in other departments, the Conservative Bureaux extend the opportunity to make political capital, and although the same men had elected their own employers out of five per cent [illegible]

Mr. Bertram's Requisition.

We publish in another column—or rather in three columns, Mr. Bertram's requisition names. At the last Election there were 1265 votes polled in all. So that nearly one-half the voters have signed Mr. Bertram's requisition. We say signed, because the greatest care has been taken to have no name on the requisition without the obtained consent of the parties.

The Election is won! Mr. Bertram may well be congratulated on his own popularity and on the popularity of the principles he upholds.

Well done West Peterborough! You are nobly doing your duty and teaching traitors that you at least are not indifferent to the disgrace and wrongs inflicted on the Country by Sir John A Macdonald and his corruptionists. Let East Peterboro arise and shake off the Creature who has so slavishly done the bidding of the Ottawa Magnate. A little effort and harmonious action and Peterboro will stand redeemed—we hope forever.

East Riding Reform Convention.

As announced in last week's Examiner, the delegates from several Townships of the Riding met in Ashburnham, Saturday. Otonabee, Asphodel, Dummer, Douro and Ashburnham were represented fully. The Back Townships had not been apprised in time to secure a full delegation.

Thomas Short, Esq., was appointed Chairman, and Mr. Stratton, Secretary.

The nominations were—Mr. Short, Mr. Anderson, Mr. Millar, Mr. Choate, Mr. Stratton and Mr. Ingram.

Mr. Short declined being a Candidate on account of circumstances preventing his giving that attention to public matters they required.

Mr. Anderson declined the Nomination, as [illegible] prevented his [illegible] meeting questions raised, which was always imperative on the candidate chosen.

On the first ballot Messrs. Ingram and Choate received the largest number, when a second ballott was taken between them, resulting in favor of Mr. Ingram.

On motion of Dr. Fife, the nomination was made unanimous in favor of Mr. Ingram.

Mr. Ingram then addressed the Convention, thanking the delegates for the confidence they had placed in him, and after stating his own political views and condemning the policy of the Government of John A. McDonald in reference to the Fishery Policy, Railroad Policy, and expenditure of public money, he accepted the nomination and said he would do his part to bring the contest to a successful issue. But while doing all he could, he would, if possible, prevail on all to use all their influence in the different localities to secure the election. As there was not a redeeming feature in the whole administration of John A. McDonald, he (Mr. Ingram) would, if elected, oppose him, and if possible defeat him, and he trusted that all true Reformers and friends of good government would rally round and redeem the County and Riding out of the hands of the present Government party. If that were once done he would gladly resign and allow another of their choice to take the place, as he did not court or desire the honor—although accepting, at present, the responsibilities.

Mr. Learmouth urged on the delegates the wisdom of decided and active measures, so that at the polls the man who now misrepresents the Riding may be left at home to see after some more congenial business than voting at the beck of John A. Macdonald.

The meeting then dispersed having given three hasty cheers for Mr. Ingram, three for the Queen, and three for the Chairman.

How the Canvas Proceeds.

Mr. Claxton, addressed the Electors at North Smith on Friday evening. Twelve gentlemen were present, mostly all Reformers. Mr. Claxton made a speech of some minutes duration, the substance of which was "that he did not intend to make a speech" on the occasion. Whereupon, Friday, the editor of the Review attempted a speech of such a nature that the chairman said:—"he would not sit and listen to such Rot," and leaving the Chair, the meeting had to come to a close. A poor reception for the champion of Confederation.

Mr. Scarlett addressed the meeting ably. He is every where received with the utmost enthusiasm. Many who were [illegible] will vote for Mr. Ingram. The [illegible] are at work every where [illegible] Mr. Ingram's election is certain. The Reception Tree and Lakevarn.

His Speech as Reported in the Speech on the Treaty and Reciprocity Policy.

The Defence of His Course in Lame Ones.

Sir John and Sir Francis have come and are gone again. They came in the night and went away in the night, unknown, no doubt, of the dark forebodings that press heavily on their minds. Of course the committee did their part to make the Lunch a success, but so far as the County is concerned it was a grand failure.

There were very few people in town that day, and they only showed a crowd to escort the hon. gentlemen to and from the cars by taking advantage of the rush of young boys and girls on returning pre-[illegible]—and a few Sons of Reformers who wished to see the man. The popularity of the Premier and Mr. Blake may be judged from the fact that on their getting into their carriages to go to the lunch only two or three persons were with them.

They had no open air meeting and in consequence all who wished to hear the man had to go to the drill shed and pay fifty cents for the luxury. Nearly one-half of all in the shed came from Cobourg, Port Hope, Millbrook, Cavan, Emily, Omemee, Lindsay and Bobcaygeon—all outside of the County. More than half of the rotundity were from Reformers, who wishing to hear what sort of a defence could be made, had gone to the Drill Shed also. If tariffology had been removed from the Drill Shed, the Reformers present could have carried a vote of non-confidence easily.

The Committee wishing to secure a large number to the lunch had put the tickets at fifty cents; but hundreds were given away to "blind Reformers" gents as the Review styles [illegible] so as to swell the depleted ranks of the John A. Macdonald party.

Sir John spoke three hours in his own defence, in weak endeavours to expose the charges of the Opposition, but could only raise a laugh or a hiss whenever telling a witty hit at some of the Emerald Isle. Arguments he had none. The Confederation Story, Intercolonial Subsidy, Nova Scotia Subsidy and Pacific Railway squandering he referred to, and tried to defend, but not a loyal present believed him sincere in what he said—except when he was striking down the Globe, George Brown and the Grits.

Sir Francis followed Sir John. At first he tried to palm himself off as a Reformer, but before he was through declared he had gone over to Sir John entirely. Of course George Brown compelled him. And he was ready and willing to form a Coalition with any men of any principles to carry out his ideas. The removal of the Silver Nuisance he held was of sufficient importance to censure his return to office, and appealed to the electors to secure the candidates of the Chief, whom all delighted to worship. Sir Francis appeared agitated and restless during the time of his speech, but left an impression and he evidently felt that he was not doing right in defending this course he had pursued but did it to beat "Brown and the Grits" who opposed him, not for love of John A or his principles. As he has made his bed he must lie on it.

Sidney Smith followed but there were only two or three dozen to hear him, and the Reporters say they were the only ones that they did not understand.

Geo. White, Jr., next attempted to address the few present, but we could only hear his miserable vain attempt to array Catholic against protestant and protestant against catholic. Such means to promote confederation deserves the just reprobation of all classes.

A few words from Mr. Moylan of the Canadian Freeman, Toronto, closed the political panorama. Mr. Moylan was very poorly received, even his own co-religionists would not stay to listen to him, they know full well the mercenary motives that brought him to Peterboro. That he is paid by John A for it, we believe.

There were about eight hundred persons present in all. One half of them were from other counties, and more than half the remainder of the electors present were reformers. There were some conservative ladies and children present but not in large numbers.

HERO WORSHIP.

Truly, What a Stock-jobbing People We Are!

"The Ancient Greeks and Romans in the time of their unsettled institutions, worshipped the heroes who were their leaders, and, [illegible] to their imaginations, it would appear that 66 dozen must be a necessary consequence of all infant States. In this 19th Century crop, we have the species of Idolatry prevail. Men, without fixed ideas on political subjects, become the Creatures of other men, if more decided character, and almost fall down and worship them—witness for instance, Mr. Claxton's address in [illegible].

"No party," is now the cry—afraid boldly to acknowledge the fact, that the John A. McDonald party have no principles on which to [illegible] unless it be on the all important principle (to them) of holding office. They heartily admit their downfall to their Chief, and tell them that township [illegible] hunge that John A. has sold out.

Mr. Claxton tells his followers that the change in our [illegible] of John A. McDonald party," with Sandfords their Chief—and to this party Mr. Claxton belongs. The only adhesive principle to cement the union of the discordant elements forming the party is—the [illegible] they worship. It is perhaps humble to Mr. Claxton to tell the Electors that he really has [illegible] himself with the history of Canadian politics that he is ready and willing, if elected, to go to Ottawa, and during three or four months of every year, forego the claims of private [illegible] and [illegible] take the views of the Government of John A. and vote as he may be told, to the men from the Counties here that the Electors will not be represented.

The Crowded Home.

Let me move slowly through the street,
Filled with an ever-changing throng,
Amid the sound of steps that beat
The murmuring wave like summer rain.

How fast the flitting figures come!
The mild, the fierce, the young, the old,
Some bright with thoughtless smiles, and some
Where secret tears have left their trace.

They pass to toil, to strife, to rest—
To halls in which the feast is spread—
To chambers where the funeral guest
In silence sits beside the dead.

And some to happy homes repair,
Where dwells the lov'd, the loving heart,
With mute caresses shall declare
The tenderness they cannot speak.

And some, who walk in calmness here,
Shall shudder as they reach the door
Where one who late in their dwelling dear,
Is fewer, for Life, forever more.

Youth, with pale cheek and slender frame
And dreams of greatness in thine eyes,
Go! but thou to build an early name,
Or early in the task to die.

Keen son of trade, with eager brow,
Who is now fluttering in thy snare?
Thy golden farthings, tower they now,
Or melt the glittering spoils in air?

Who of this crowd to-night shall steward
The dance till daylight gleams again?
Who sorrow over the untimely dead?
Who wrongs in throes of mortal pain?

Some, famine-struck, shall think how long
The cold, dark hours, how slow the light!
And some who flaunt amid the throng,
Shall hide in depths of shame to-night.

Each where his tasks or pleasures call,
They pass, and heed each other not,
There is, who heeds, who holds them all
In his large love and boundless thought.

These struggling tides of life, that seem
In wayward, aimless course to tend,
Are eddies of the mighty stream
That rolls to its appointed end.

Take one large table spoonful of Paris green, and mix it with ten table spoonfuls of flour. These must be mixed very thoroughly; fill the mixture is of one shade of color throughout. Take of this mixture, two table spoonfuls, and put it into a gallon of water. Agitate it so all will mix through the water, and stir it occasionally, to keep it from settling—for if it is not kept stirred it will settle. Put the water thus prepared into a sprinkler, and apply when the plants are dry and the larvæ are at work. In a very few minutes the larvæ will have gone to "that bourne from whence no traveller returns."

The liquid, applied in this way twice or three times during the season, will be sufficient to protect the plants. Used as we say, will destroy the insects, there is no danger of its hurting the plants, nor does sufficient go into the ground to do any harm.

Mrs Shooting Their Own Officers in Battle.—It is very well known that a great many officers, when they go into battle, have comparatively little fear of the enemy, but a great deal of their own men. "Wait till we go into action boys, then, that's all," is an unpleasant reflection which has been known and unfrequently to fall from the lips of a private in reference to an officer against whom he has a grudge. Many years ago, a very tyrannical young Captain, in the British army, who became disagreeably prominent in the eleventh hour of having aroused his serfiority, addressed his company on the eve of a great action, beseeching their pardon. "We're something else to think about than you and your deeds now, sir," was the stern and not very reassuring reply. The recollection of this circumstance is recalled by the death of a young officer in India by the hand of a private in the regiment. Of the motive of the case we know nothing, but it is remarkable that this is the fifth or sixth instance of the kind within a few years. Petty tyranny is unfortunately to be found in all services, and all countries, and such occurrences as these are a warning to those who have any tendency toward it.

To persons employed in constant mental toil, a rule of anxiety, Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites is especially adapted, namely to Teachers, Clergymen, Editors, Lawers and impecunious business men.

BREATHING.

Considered in all its relations, the function of breathing is a wonder of wonders. Because we are familiar with the process of inhaling and expelling air from the chest, it excites neither admiration, surprise nor even thought. By watching the play of the respiratory apparatus, however, some perplexing phenomena are presented well worth studying.

The lungs are two membranous sacks one on each side, of unequal dimensions in man, separated by a vertical partition, but united at the bottom of the neck in a single tube—the windpipe.

When one lung is diseased, life is maintained by the other. Both are severely inflamed, ulcerated in any way rendered unfit for vital service, death inevitably ensues.

Every living thing, from animals to the whole vegetable kingdom, is just as dependent for life on atmospheric air as ... breathes through the ... leaves. If torn away the trunk will languish and die.

In transplanting young trees, it is an unphilosophical practice to trim the limbs so closely that only a few twigs are left. In that mutilated condition the effort to live is a hard struggle. More die than survive the violence, because they are deprived of their breathing organs. One side of each leaf inhales carbon from the air for making wood, while the other throws off oxygen for keeping the atmosphere supplied with a material which supports life, without which death would reign triumphantly.

Search Before Your Own Door.

Do you think uncharitably things handed down from those of yore?
Then go through your neighbor's dwelling, count the rubbish from your door.

Let its filth, as rust from there gather, leave no cranny of decay;
Plunder up every round unsightly, brush the fallen leaves away.

If we faithfully have labored thus to sweep without, within,
Words that by the sacred portal of the inner temple grow—

Poisons against the heart distilling, bearing bitterness and woe,

Then, perchance, we may have leisure, ere our judgment seat be set,
All the work assigned us finished, we before the Lord may stand.

Know that each one has his mission, his appointed place to fill,
Some to struggle in the midst of conflict—others over ocean of design—

Whom the thistles, thickly springing, daily must be cleared away.

But, alas! our work neglecting, oft we mount the judgment seat,
With his failings, his omissions, we our weary brother greet;

In some hidden mesh forgotten, searching with a careful eye,
We the springing weeds discover—some slight blemish there descry.

For his clothfulness, his blindness, we our brother harshly chide,
Glorying in our strength and wisdom, we the weakness him in our pride.

Ask not why he has neglected thus before his door to sweep,
Why brown cardock, he has slumbered, failed his garden plot to keep.

On the judgment seat still sitting we no help-ing hand extend
To assist our weaker brother, his shortcoming to amend;

For his weariness, quick fainting, we no sweet compassion show—

From our store no cordial bring him, no encouragement bestow.

Ah, while busied with our neighbor, ugging sore to exercise care,
Calling to the thoughtless tillers, to their labor to repair—

Let unseen the thistles gathered, weeds are growing where of yore
Flowers rare and sweet were blooming when we swept before our door.

Ah! how easy else our brother faithful ward and watch to keep,
Easier than to share the conflict, "by the stuff" at home to stay,

Easier far to list in judgment than to humbly watch and pray.

DOWN HILL.

Not long since I had occasion to visit one of the courts, and while conversing with a legal friend I heard the name of John Anderson called.

"There's a hard case," remarked my friend.

I looked upon the man in the prisoner's dock. He was standing up, and pleaded guilty to the crime of theft. He was a man beyond middle life, though not old. His garb was torn, coarse and filthy, his hair matted with dirt, and his bowed form quivered with delirium. Certainly I never saw a more pitiable object. I moved my place. He saw me move, and he turned his head. He gazed upon me a single instant, and then, covering his face with his hands, he sank powerless into his seat.

"Good God!" I voluntarily ejaculated, starting forward, "Will——"

I had half spoken his name, when he quickly raised his head and cast upon me a look of such imploring agony that my tongue was tied at once. I asked my legal friend if the prisoner had a counsel. He said no. I then told him to do all in his power for the poor fellow's benefit and I would not remain to see him tried; tears came to my eyes as I gazed upon him, and it was not until I gained the street and walked some distance, that I could breathe freely.

John Anderson! Alas, he was ashamed to be known as his mother's son. That was not his real name, but you shall know him by no other. I will call him by the name that stands upon the records of the court,

John Anderson was my school-mate and it was not many years ago—not over twenty—that we left the academy together, he to return to the home of wealth, parents, I to sit down in the dingy sanctum of a newspaper office, and there to wrestle off across the ocean I was quite some four years, and when I returned I found John a married man. His father was dead, and had left his son a princely fortune.

"Ah, C——," he said to me as he met me at the railway station, "you shall see what a bird I have caged. My Ellen is a lark, a robin, a very princess of all birds that ever looked beautiful or sung sweetly."

He was enthusiastic, but not mistaken, for I found his wife all he had said, simply omitting the poetry. She was one of the most beautiful women I ever saw. And as good too—as lovely and kind. Aye, she so loved John, that she really loved all his friends, what a lucky woman to find such a husband as John Anderson was, tall, straight, high browed, with a face as faultlessly beautiful as artist ever copied. And he was good—too—and kind, generous, and true.

I spent a week with them, and I was happy all the while. John's mother lived with them, as fine an old lady as ever breathed, and nothing herself, contented joy by doting on her "darling boy" as she always called him.

I gave her an account of my adventures by sea and land in foreign climes, [illegible] Ellen. I loved her darling.

I did not see John again for four years. In the evening I reached his house. He was not in, but his wife [illegible] to receive me, and two or three boys were at play upon Ellen's chair. I knew at once they were my friend's children. Everything seemed pleasant as of old, until the little ones were abed and asleep, and then I could see that Ellen was striving hard to hide it, but it was at last [illegible] and smiles could not conceal a sorrow.

"It is John," she said. His step was [illegible] and he entered. He [illegible] a happy [illegible] as I could see, [illegible] could [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

To the Electors of the East Riding of Peterborough.

GENTLEMEN,

Having received the unanimous vote of a large and respectable convention to be the Standard bearer of the Reformers in this Riding, at the approaching election, and having also been most strongly and earnestly solicited to become a Candidate for your suffrage, as well as having the assurances of a cordial support from a large number of respectable and influential voters, I feel it a duty incumbent on me to accept the nomination, and I now appear before you as your candidate, respectfully soliciting your suffrages and support.

On my political principles I need make but little comment, they being so well known to the most of you. Suffice it to say that my feelings of loyalty and attachment to our illustrious Queen and British Institutions are so strong, that I would feel it to be my duty to preserve intact the present existing connection between this and the mother country.

The constitution under which we are now working and given to us by the Act of Confederation, I should also feel it to be my duty to guard inviolate

If elected I should also insist upon retrenchment in the public expenditure in every possible way consistent with the efficient working of the Government, and should oppose most strongly any expenditure without the consent of Parliament.

I would also support any wise measure that would have for its object the encouragement of immigration to this country.

I should also favor the passing of an election law for the election of members to the House of Commons similar to that which obtains for the election of members to the Local Legislature, and should also favor the passing of a law for the trial of controverted elections by the Judges.

I can say without the slightest hesitation that I have no confidence in the present men in power. The grossly corrupt acts of some of them, the disloyal utterances of others, and the extravagant acts of all, I would deem sufficient to induce me at the earliest opportunity to vote a want of confidence in them, but at the same time I would consider it to be my duty to assist, to the best of my ability in the perfecting of any useful measure irrespective of the source from which it might emanate.

I hope to have the pleasure of seeing many of you in your respective localities ere long, when I will have a better opportunity of giving you a more extended enunciation of my views in regard to the political situation of the country, than I can do in an address of this sort.

In the mean time,

I have the honor to be,

Gentlemen,

Faithfully yours,

EVANS INGRAM.

To the Electors of the West Riding of Peterboro'.

GENTLEMEN:

Having been requested by the friends of the Dominion Government to become their Candidate in your Riding in the approaching contest, I have agreed to become the standard-bearer of the party of Union and Progress.

The last few years have seen great changes in the position which we occupy, and from being a small colony of Great Britain, Canada is developing into almost national greatness. These changes have brought about a new condition of political parties, and since Confederation all prior issues have become dead, and should be forgotten, and worthy men who were formerly opposed to each other politically, have united to carry out to successful completion the great scheme of Confederation. This has developed a great party who acknowledge Sir John A. Macdonald as their Chief,—and to this party I belong.

I approve the policy which has been pursued by the present Government in the past, and will assist them if honored with election as your representative, in developing and carrying forward, successfully, their Railway and Canal Policy which is so essential to the prosperity and greatness of our Dominion.

I think the action taken by the Parliament of Canada, with reference to the Treaty of Washington, was wise, patriotic, and loyal to our British connection, and as such must meet the warm approval of every one who at heart desires the cords, which bind us to Britain, strengthened.

I am of the opinion that all honorable endeavours should be made to secure such Tariff arrangements as will give our people a free market for their produce in the United States; and, failing to obtain this, a Tariff should be imposed by our Government to afford proper protection to Canadian producers.

I think all measures should be fairly considered upon their merits, without reference to the source from which they may come; and all measures that I believe to be introduced for the benefit of the Dominion shall have my support.

While claiming for my self freedom of judgement, and being ready to allow the same to those who are politically opposed to me, I shall always condemn and oppose any action that may be taken for merely partisan or factious purposes; and I highly disapprove of any political party advancing views and urging principles which they hope may assist them to power, and then to be thrown aside as things served their purpose.

I feel that—from my long residence in Peterborough, and from the nature of my business transactions—I have acquired a knowledge that will enable me intelligently to consider measures which will tend to develop our resources and increase our trade and prosperity.

I shall take every opportunity of seeing as many of you as I possibly can during the campaign, and will be glad at all times if any of you desire further information as to views, to be asked as to such matters as may not have been touched upon in the narrow compass of a formal address.

I am, Gentlemen,

Your obedient Servant,

W. CLUXTON.

WHAT REMAINS.—

Mr. Bertram, is everywhere received with enthusiasm. Never in the history of the Riding was there such zeal and activity manifested for a Candidate. Long ago Majorities, will be given in every Township then in the last Census. The political aspect of the Town too is undergoing considerable change, so that Mr. Bertrams Election is sure—overwhelming. Let every man work as that the Majority may be a sweeping one.

Mr. Johnston, Grand Master of the Loyal Orange Society of Ireland, will visit Peterborough at the earnest invitation of his brother Orangemen here. We believe it is the intention to present him with an address, and a Lunch or Dinner will be got up in his honor. The whole arrangements are in hands of a committee and will soon be made known. The season of the year is not the best, as it is in the midst of Hay harvest, still we doubt not but that a large concourse of his admirers will spend a day in his honor and in honor of their own order.

WHO IS TO BLAME?—Several complaints have recently been made to us concerning the Bradford and Selwyn Mails not arriving regularly; the blame rests at some of these offices or at Lakefield. We trust the attention of Postmasters will be given to the matter once, this remove the cause of the complaints. We fear that time is not ripe enough to the Bookkeeper Post Office that might be suggested.

VERY STRONG.—The Toronto Mail has brought out Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Francis Hincks through the Pacific Scandal. We understand there is no circular communication; but the other Conservative newspapers in Toronto have performed the feat of endorsing the charges with the most unblushing assurance. Their assurance may well astonish us their collection.

It is rumored that Mr. Cameron, of West Huron, will be a candidate in the Reform interest for the West Riding of Durham, in opposition to Mr. Perry, Minister of Finance for the Dominion Riding.

DEFENCE RAILWAY.—The commissioners appointed to report on the defence railway have been in Parliament, to the advantage of this county. He has not spoken through out in favor of economy or good government; in fact he never uttered a word in the House on any such subject. He blindly followed John A. McDonald in everything he introduced, even supporting all his extravagant legislation in giving $30,000,000 into the hands of Ministers, without the possibility of ever being called to account for their acts. Already Mr. Grover's name is spoken of for a good fat job on some Railway Enterprise in the West.

We advise a careful perusal of an article in this issue, copied from the "Monetary Times" an ably conducted commercial paper, non-political. The writer in the "Times" shows how speculators are already calculating on making millions out of the $30,000,000 voted to Sir John for the Pacific Railway. John A. Macdonald has always boasted of his policy of helping his friends, and now many of the hangers-on are looking for a rich harvest. Round town, Mr. Perry's departure for Manitoba in connection with something on the Pacific Railway has again and again been talked of. He is expecting to make more out of that enterprize than he could out of the Customs at $300 or $1,000 a year. Report too, after Mr. Grover's return home from Ottawa, was to the same effect. About forty five members of the Commons are said to be members of Railway rings, and if returned, four times thirty millions of dollars will not satisfy them. Surely the Electors of Ontario are not prepared to support such railway rings, at the public expense; if they are not, then they should vote against Mr. Grover and the Government Party, everywhere.

The 80,000 By-law Carried.

The vote on the $80,000 By-law was taken on Tuesday last and carried by 95 of a majority, almost by as many as it was defeated by before It now remains only for the Council to pass it, which will be done as soon as directed by law. The Railway Company will meet on a day of two at Cobourg to complete all necessary arrangements to proceed with the work at once. We trust that there will be no more delays, and that ere long the iron horse will again assume communication between Cobourg and Peterboro.

BOBCAYGEON AND VERULAM should now put their shoulder to the wheel as all obstacles are removed.—Peterboro has proved her sincerity in voting $90,000 to the open[illegible] of a road north, and we do not hesitate to say that Mr. John Fowler will have men at work at Bobcaygeon in a few days. In fact, to Mr. Fowler's enterprize and energy the resuscitation of the Cobourg road is due, and also the bunding of a road north of Peterboro; and we believe that no man would sooner complete the work than he. The Bobcaygeon people should use their influence now to secure the Verulam bonus, and by doing so, secure the early construction of the road right through.

The vote in the different wards stood as follows:

	FOR	AGAINST.
North Ward	32	12
Centre Ward	27	3
South Ward	31	9
East Ward	36	7

Majority for By-law, 95.

Look at This.

Sidney Smith, when Post Master General, dismissed several Post Masters who voted against him. They did so conscientiously too, having no faith in him. One of those Mr. Clemisha, of South Monaghan is a most honorable honest man, but he couldn't swallow Sidney's political manœuvres, and was dismissed.

LOOK AT THAT.

Sidney Smith is now receiving $2,000 a year from the Blake, Mackenzie government as inspector of Registries and yet he had the hardihood to get up in the drill shed and make a harangue in favour of John A. Macdonald, calling on all present to support him. It would serve him right if Blake should do to him as he did to the Post Masters. What right has he to come to Peterboro as the sycophant of John A.? But there is consolation in knowing that he has no influence with the Electors.

The Writs Issued.

The writs for the Elections were issued on Monday, returnable on the Third day of September. The Elections will therefore be upon us at once. No Government ever so disregarded the interests of the people as the Dominion as the present men in power. They have at the most inconvenient season of the year forced the Elections on the people, compelling them either to neglect their harvest or to allow the Government Candidates to be returned. It is well known that the rural distincts are Reform as a whole; while the towns and cities, on the contrary, are Conservative. By holding the Elections during the months of July and August, just in the middle of Harvest, they hope to gain an undue advantage over the rural sections of the Country, and thus; if possible secure a majority to support them during the next Parliament. If we mistake not, however the honest Yeoman of the Country will resent such conduct, and although at a great sacrifice of time, in the hurried season of the year, show the John A. Macdonald Party that they cannot carry everything their way

It is well known that at no season hitherto was labour so scarce as it is this season. Wages will be high, and in consequence, a more than usual effort will be made by farmers to do their own work, with their own fixed help. To take men, therefore, from their [illegible] harvest during this or next month, will be an immense loss to the country, entailing a direct loss of not less than $500,000 on the country.

This is one of the Sacrifices John A. Macdonald is making for the good of the Country. How few will see it in the light of having the welfare of the country at heart.

The Electors should bear in mind the means used to return John A. to Power again, and although it may be a loss of a day or two in the business season of the year, nevertheless a day well spent will hurl from power the men who thus in their calculations disregard the farmers' interests. It will be much to ask the Yeomen of Peterborough to be ready for the struggle. We can not tell the day of the Nomination, but this one thing is certain, it is not more than a [illegible] days distant.

East Riding.

In this Riding Mr. Ingram has commenced his canvas, and has promise of the warm co-operation of all his old friends and a great many new ones. The time for the canvas is again very short, about, as we take people by surprise. This it is thought will be in favor of the Government. Considering the hay has been all clung in the field, and we doubt not the friends working for him. The son of Sir John A. McDonald, in leaving the electors in the very middle of harvest, is a cowardly abandonment of the very [illegible] which he began to canvass power, and we [illegible] the people will not [illegible] such conduct. Mr. Ingram is one of the best farmers in the Riding, and is [illegible] to the interests of the farmers, and we [illegible] opportunity.

In the East Riding there is a [illegible] spirit of discontentment with the acts of the Ottawa. His votes in the past Parliament [illegible]

The Twelfth of July.

The brethren of the different Lodges of Peterboro District celebrated their usual anniversary, by having a Pic nic at Young's Point. They met in their Lodge Room at 6 o'clock. At eight they marched to the train headed by a Brass Band, and went to Lakefield where they were met by the Lodges of the northern portion of the District, and marched through the streets to the landing of the steamer.

The village was in holiday attire, the dwellings and stores were largely decorated with Union Jacks and Orange banners. The stores were not fully opened out in the morning as all were out to witness the procession which by this time had swelled to large dimensions.

About 9.30 the party were crowding on to the Chipewa or Col. Strickland as the steamboat is called, owned by Mr. Beamish of Port Hope. The obliging captain of the steamer is a son of Mr. Beamish.

Between four and five hundred packed themselves on the steamer and a scow which was alongside, and soon these were on their way to the lake, but owing to the over laden state of the boat and scow and the manner in which the Katchewanuck and river was crammed with Saw Logs, but slow progress could be made. At the Smithtown rapids the Logs had taken almost full possession of the river compelling the Captain to hug the shore too much, which resulted in getting on the rocks and detaining the party almost an hour and a half. An anchor with a line attached to it was thrown out and many hands were at work to drag her off but the anchor, not the boat, dragged, and compelled them to use a rope long enough to reach a tree in a position to secure a long and strong pull. This time success followed and again she was on her way, but without the scow as some one had loosed the rope and left her behind, so strong, however, is the love of amusement and the desire for tipping the light fantastic toe, that not one on the boat noticed the matter but kept on the even tenor of their way. The first intelligment was landed below Young's Point as a boom completly across the river would have caused too much delay to get to Stoney Lake in time to bring up the remainder of those waiting behind.

More than half of those desirous of seeing the Lakes and obtaining a sail were left at Lakefield and had to enjoy themselves there as best they could, which we learned on returning by [illegible] they did very well. [illegible] up the river to the head of the Otonabee Church, near a beautiful spring, and after attending to the wants of the inner man betook themselves in covering the woods, reclining under the spreading trees. Many of the ladies were so anxious to win the car of some hearty fair one as they were to celebrate the deeds of William at the Boyne. We could not help admiring the while the thoughtfulness of Lady Macdonald, Sir John's husband, as he was generally engaged in keeping the [illegible] in good humor.

Captain Spencer succeeded in [illegible] the steamer up to the head of the lake, when about 4 o'clock a move was made to [illegible] about the Indian Encampment.

The day was very fine, and but for the high [illegible] would have been very pleasant, but [illegible] in the history of the day, a [illegible] was the only one of the occasion that [illegible] that the day was well appreciated by [illegible] Upon the whole the day was a [illegible] success, and we [illegible] to witness [illegible] to the grey haired dames. Pumps, Reapers and Mowers

To the Public in General, and Farmers in particular.

PUMPS. MACHINES

Henry Owens

Begs leave to bring to your notice once more his truly celebrated SWING and FORCE PUMPS, which have already received five Provincial First Prizes, and have hitherto met with unparalleled success. There can be no reasonable doubt now after a years trial of the superiority of this pump over all others. H. O. has purchased the sole right under four patents, for the counties of Peterborough and Victoria, and will keep a large stock on hand if possible, which he will sell at very cheap rate. He has increased his facilities for making all kinds of pumps, having lately added to his machinery a new and first-class pump boring machine. Every thing in the pump line can be furnished on the shortest notice, and Repairs carefully and promptly attended to. Parties ordering Pumps please state depth of well and all other necessary particulars.

HENRY OWENS

is again in the field with REAPERS and MOWERS, and would respectfully call the attention of Farmers to the fact that all the more and Mowers he has sold during the past three years have given unbounded satisfaction. He will have on hand this year Wood Self-Rake Reaper and Mower, Cayuga Chief Mower, also Kennard's Self-Rake Reaper, and any other machine of this description that may be required can be furnished by him on very short notice. Parties intending to purchase Reapers or Mowers this coming season will find it to their advantage to give their orders before the 1st day of May, so as to that date he is prevented to sell on best terms prices; after the 1st of May on account of the rise in Iron, prices of Machines will be raised about 10 per cent. Sample Machine to be seen at my shop.

Common Pumps as Cheap as Others.

Henry Owens gladly avails himself of this opportunity to offer his most sincere thanks to those friends who have so liberally and generally extended their patronage to him during the past few years, and he hopes by honest and energetic attention to their orders so to merit a continuance of the favor so highly prized.

BY-LAW No.—

A BY-LAW to provide for the granting of a Bonus to the extent of Eighty Thousand Dollars, in Debentures of the Corporation of the Town of Peterborough, to the Cobourg, Peterborough and Marmora Railway and Mining Company, to aid in the construction of the Railway of the said Company northward to Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls.

WHEREAS, the Corporation of the Town of Peterborough have resolved to grant aid by way of Bonus to the Cobourg, Peterboro', and Marmora Railway and Mining Company, to assist them in extending their Railway northwards to Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls, by giving to the said Company Debentures of the Corporation of the Town of Peterborough to the extent of Eighty Thousand Dollars, upon the terms and conditions hereinafter mentioned.

And Whereas, by an Act of the Parliament of the late Province of Canada, passed in the twenty-fourth year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, entitled, "An Act to consolidate the debt of the Town of Peterborough, and to authorize the issue of Debentures upon the security of Town property" and for other purposes," it was enacted that for the purposes, and in the manner therein particularly mentioned and set out, and to the amount therein mentioned, it should be lawful for the Commissioners therein named to issue Debentures under the Seal of the said Corporation, to be signed by the Mayor, countersigned by the Treasurer of the said Corporation, and by the Secretary of the said Commissioners, and that the Council of the said Town of Peterborough should annually, upon the application of the said Commissioners, raise upon the rateable property of the town the interest and sinking fund requisite for the ultimate redemption of the said Debentures.

And Whereas, by an Act of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario, passed in the year of our Lord One Thousand Eight Hundred and Seventy-two, entitled, "An Act to authorize the Cobourg, Peterborough and Marmora Railway and Mining Company to extend its line of Railway, and for other purposes." It was, amongst other things, enacted that it should be lawful for the Corporation of the Town of Peterborough by By-law duly submitted to and approved by the ratepayers of the Town in the manner required by law, and notwithstanding the provisions of the Act hereinbefore recited, to grant aid by way of bonus, to an amount not exceeding One Hundred Thousand Dollars to the said Company, and to issue Debentures therefor, which Debentures should be subject to the same provisions as those authorized under the said recited Act, and further, that it should be lawful for the said Corporation of the Town of Peterborough by such By-law to impose such conditions upon which such aid should be granted as the said Corporation should deem expedient, which conditions, upon the acceptance by the said Company of the aid so granted, should be binding upon the said Company.

BE IT THEREFORE ENACTED, by the Municipal Council of the Town of Peterborough as follows:

1. That it shall and may be lawful for the Corporation of the Town of Peterborough to aid and assist, by way of Bonus, in the construction by the Cobourg, Peterborough, and Marmora Railway and Mining Company of an extension of their Railway northward to Chemong Lake, Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls, by giving to the said Company the Debentures of the said Corporation of the Town of Peterborough to the extent of Eighty Thousand Dollars, and that for that purpose it shall and may be lawful for the Mayor of the said Corporation for the said sum of Eighty Thousand Dollars, such Debentures to be issued in the manner provided by the said recited Act of the Twenty-fourth Victoria, and to be otherwise subject to the provisions of the said Act.

2 That the said Debentures shall be made payable in twenty years at farthest from the time or times they may be respectively issued, as hereafter provided.

3 That the said Debentures shall bear interest at the rate of six per cent per annum from the date thereof, which interest shall be payable half-yearly at the office of the Secretary of the said Commissioners in the Town of Peterborough.

4 That the necessary rate for the payment of the interest and sinking fund for the ultimate liquidation of the said Debentures, as required by the said recited Act of the Twenty-fourth Victoria, shall, in addition to all other rates, be raised levied and collected in each year, upon all the rateable property in the said Municipality, during the continuance of the indebtedness created by the said Debentures.

5 That the said Debentures shall be signed and handed over to the said Cobourg, Peterborough and Marmora Railway and Mining Company, or to whomsoever they may appoint to receive the same, in the manner, at the times, and subject to the conditions hereinafter next named, and not otherwise, that is to say: A portion thereof, namely, to the amount of Forty Thousand Dollars, to be issued and delivered to the said Company when the said Corporation of Railway shall have been completed except as to the filling in of Rice Lake, as hereinafter mentioned, and in running order from the Town of Cobourg to Chemong Lake, and provided that it is so completed and in running order before the First day of April, One Thousand Eight Hundred and Seventy-three; and another portion thereof, namely, to the amount of Forty Thousand Dollars, to be issued and delivered to the said Company when the said Railway shall have been completed except as to the filling in of Rice Lake, as aforesaid, and in running order from the Town of Cobourg aforesaid to the village of Bobcaygeon, provided that it be so completed and in running order by the First day of March, One Thousand Eight Hundred and Seventy-four; and the remainder of the Debentures, namely, to the amount of Twenty Thousand Dollars, when the said Railway shall have been completed except as to the filling in of Rice Lake as aforesaid, and in running order from the Town of Cobourg to the village of Bobcaygeon aforesaid, and to the village of Fenelon Falls, by the completion of Victoria Road, by the County of Victoria, and further, to be so completed and in running order by the First day of March, One Thousand Eight Hundred and Seventy-five. Provided further, that the said respective portions of the said Debentures are only to be issued and delivered as aforesaid in the event of the said respective portions of the said Railway being so completed and in running order by the times hereinbefore mentioned.

6. That the said Bonus or aid to be given as aforesaid and in every part and parcel thereof shall be and is hereby made subject to the conditions hereinafter next mentioned, that is to say:

(1.) That the said Railway Company shall run or cause to be run at least one train a day (a regular freight and passenger train) each way between Cobourg and the Northern terminus for the time being of the said Railway.

(2.) That a solid embankment and bridge shall be constructed over the Rice Lake within a period of five years from the passing of this By-law, according to the plans of Walter Shanley, Esquire, Civil Engineer.

(3.) That the said Company shall not, nor will amalgamate with, or enter into any arrangements with any rival Company, whereby a tariff shall be agreed to be mutually charged by both Companies, or for the apportioning of trade between them.

(4.) That a regular Passenger and Freight Station of the said Railway shall be maintained in the Town of Peterborough.

Husband:—I shall know them better hereafter, Druggists and Storekeepers are doing not only themselves a great deal of harm, but their customers also by imposing them to buy an article unknown and without merit. "Perry Davis' Pain-Killer" has been before the public for over thirty years, it is known in every quarter of the earth, and is sold by every Druggist and most storekeepers and grocers. As a Cholera specific and Diarrhœa medicine, its reputation has no parell, I am surprised that we have lived so many years without it.

Wife:—Charles, the reason you have been taking whatever the storekeeper would recommend, we have always had a bottle of Pain Cure or Reliever or Pain Remedy or some such trash in the house, we have tried them over and over again.

Husband:—And that is just the reason I objected to try the Pain-Killer on my Rheumatism, I thought it was like those other things a humbug.

Be sure and get the genuine Pain-Killer, only 25 cts. per bottle. Beware of counterfeits.

Sold every where, price 25 cts. and 50 cts. per bottle.

Sword and Plow.

FROM THE GERMAN.

There once was a Count, no [illegible] Knight,
Who felt that his end grew [illegible]
And he called his sons before [illegible]
To part them his goods and [illegible]

He called for his plow, [illegible]
That gallant, good old [illegible]
They brought him both [illegible]
And thus he his [illegible] gave:

"My first-born son, my pride and might,
Do thou my sword retain;
My castle on the [illegible] bright,
And all my [illegible]

"On thee, my well-loved younger boy,
My plow I here bestow,
A peaceful life shalt thou enjoy,
In the quiet vale below."

Contented sank the sire to rest,
Now all was given away,
The sons held true his last behest,
Won on their [illegible]

Now tell us which of [illegible]
Of the choice [illegible]
And tell us what came of the vale so tame,
And the humble peasant wight?

O ask not of me what the end may be,
Ask of the country round!
The castle is dust, the sword is rust,
The height is but desert ground.

But the [illegible] plow in its ample pride
Of the autumn sunlight now,
It teems and it ripens far and wide,
And the home [illegible]

GARDEN SOIL.

Try to select a light, not a heavy soil, and a south-eastern, rather than a north-western exposure.

If clayey, make it friable by adding sand or sandy soil, wood mould, or prepared muck.

[illegible] and salt [illegible] shovelled under cover, so that under cover when prepared, to prevent rain from washing away the most valuable parts. Let it remain so several weeks, turning occasionally before raking it well and [illegible] it with muck at the rate of four bushels to a cart [illegible] way the latter will soon decompose, lose all acidity, and be ready, when composted with [illegible] to absorb and retain gases resulting from the decomposition. This ammonia, which has a powerful influence on the coloring of plants, will be retained in this way [illegible] will be very valuable [illegible] and having been a means of [illegible] organic matter. Besides improving the mechanical condition of [illegible] and sandy soils, it will also render them earlier than they otherwise would be, on account of its capacity to absorb and retain heat, and the roots of plants in such a soil are not so liable to injury from intense freezing.

A garden soil, if possible, should be trenched, for many reasons of a mechanical and chemical kind. Suffice it to say that in such soil plants will not suffer from drought, because the air in circulating through it deposits moisture on the surface of its particles. The soil at a certain depth, being at a lower temperature in hot weather, when plants [illegible] moist, all these [illegible] is put by [illegible] the [illegible] will have moisture deposited on its particles because of their being at a lower temperature than the surrounding atmosphere.

A piece of [illegible] an [illegible] will have moisture at once deposited on its surface, for it is at a lower temperature than the atmosphere, and the same will be true of a [illegible] garden soil when [illegible] ly through its particles, which it will do if not pervaded by stagnant water.

In loosening the soil about plants, use a fork rather than a spade. It will do the work better, and with less injury to the roots.

A wit once asked a peasant what part he performed in the great drama of life. "I mind my own business," was the reply.

One of the saddest things about human nature is, that a man may guide others in the path of life without walking in it himself, that he may be a pilot and yet a cast-a-way.

A want has been felt and expressed by physicians, for a safe and reliable purgative, such a want is now supplied in "Parsons' Purgative Pills".

Henry K. Bood, of Jefferson, Maine, was cured of spitting blood, soreness and weakness of the stomach, by the use of 'Johnson's Anodyne Liniment'.

A FRIEND IN NEED. "Grace's Celebrated Salve" is a friend 'indeed'. Who has not found it such in curing cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, felons, boils, and even the most obstinate old ulcers and other sores? It is a wonderful compound, suited alike to the skin of the child and of the adult.

Is your throat sore, or are you annoyed by a constant cough? If so, use promptly "Bryan's Pulmonic Wafer." They will give you instant relief. For [illegible] air passages of phlegm or mucious, and allay inflamation, and no other remedy can be had for coughs, colds, or any complaint of the throat or lungs, and if taken in time their efficacy will soon be proved. Sold by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cents per box.

The use of tobacco causes indigestion, and [illegible] nervous [illegible], a [illegible] strong drink, [illegible] [illegible] destroys the vitality of the blood, produces [illegible], [illegible] [illegible] makes a man miserable, and prematurely old. When the diseases are serious and stubborn, the best remedy is Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites, as it restores circulation, the nervous ganglia, builds up the muscles, and [illegible] healthy Living Heart, Stomach and [illegible].

HOME.—A private shelter to cover in two loving hearts, the comfy name of which is the virtue of women, and from whose doors all other blessing of civilized life are to be [illegible]. [illegible] [illegible] will [illegible] you a supply of the "Canadian Pain Destroyer," to prevent disease or for the cure of coughs, colds, summer complaints, rheumatism, neuralgia, &c. For sale by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cents per bottle.

POOR HORSES.—There are thousands of poor horses dragging out a miserable existence, suffering from a variety of diseases, rendering them almost worthless, that would be restored into thankful creatures, and a value given to them of which their owners never dreamed, would they but use the means within their reach. Select Poetry.

Nothing to Me.
BY S. RUSSELL SHARMAN.

A gossiping lady was Primitive Prim—
Miss Primitive Prim, I should say.
In figure, Miss Prim was unusually slim—
In temper, unusually gay;
And her great delight was to hover close to ten
Her gossiping neighbor, Miss Betsy M'Cree.

Miss Betsy M'Cree was a lady of—well,
I could, if I would, tell her age;
But I know very well, if she knew I did tell,
She would fly in adorable rage.
And Miss Betsy's great joy and peculiar whim
Was to gossip and chat with Primitive Prim.

Miss Primitive sat in her soft easy-chair,
With her table of tea-things set;
She sat in her chair, and she muttered, "Where
Can Betsy be?—whom best she met?
She promised me faithfully that she would be Here early, to chat o'er a cup of good tea."

Miss Primitive's time-piece had warned for (Her usual time for tea).
The clock struck four, whereon knock at the door
Was heard, and Betsy M'Cree
Walk'd into the room—I should say, perhaps,
Ran—
Kiss'd her dear friend Miss Prim, and thus she began:

"My dearest Miss Prim, pray how do you do?
I should have been here before,
An hour, or two, but Primitive, she
Would have thought when just leaving my door
I should most friend Palaver, you know Mrs P
The lady that squints—but that's nothing to me.

"Well, Mrs. Palaver stopped me and said;
'Miss M'Cree, have you heard of the news?
My dear,' she said, 'Mr. Flighty is dead—
The merchant who lived in the mews,
Don't spread it, Miss Prim, but folks do say that he Poison took—but of course, that's nothing to me.'

"Lor, who would have thought it?" said Primitive Prim,
"Though I've heard, by-the-by Miss M'Cree,
That his wife was a limb—such a vixen to him
(Mind, this is between you and me),
That he often would drown his sorrows in wine—
But of course Miss M'Cree that's no business of mine.

"In short' Miss M'Cree, I never could bear
That odious woman's conceit,
I cannot abear that detestable air
She gives one whenever we meet.
I believe she's in debt, though she dresses so fine—
But of course, Miss M'M'Cree, that's no business of mine."

"I echo your words," said Betsy M'Cree,
"And I think it quite right we should tell
Our friend Mrs. P. our suspicions, that she
May be on her guard, dear, as well,
For it seems a shame that such people should be Permitted to live—though its nothing to me.

"You know dear Miss Prim, I'm not one of that sort
To cause any unpleasantness, dear—
Not one of that sort to make words or retort,
Though there's not many like me, I fear
But as sure as my name is Betsy M'Cree,
Palaver shall know—though its nothing to me."

"Quite right, Miss M'Cree—quite right, I repeat,
It's a duty my dear, not a choice,
Some people we meet would think it a treat
To expose at the top of their voice,
Some people care nought for the precept divine;
I hate such, I do—though no business of mine.

"I told you, I think, that whilst walking one day—
Let me see, 'twas the week before last—
I know 'twas the day Mr Hook ran away—
Mrs Flighty came hurry past,
And she smelt dear, of SOMETHING we will not define;
But, of course Miss M'Cree—that's no business of mine."

A horrified look, with hands thrown up on high—
A sudden expression of shame,
With a roll of the eye—was Betsy's reply
At the thought of the something's name,
Then a wave of the hand as she drank up her tea,
As much as to say—and its nothing to me.

I can tell you her reason for silence I think,
She was troubled with spasms again,
At such times I think, her medicinal drink
Was brandy, to lessen the pain;
And she had been sipping her pure cau-de-vie
Though of course my dear readers—that's nothing to me.

So Miss Prim continued for Betsy M'Cree;
"Of course dear, if one is unwell,
As we are, M'Cree, then a drop in one's tea
As medicine, is all very well.
But Mrs. P drinks rum, gin, brandy, and wine
Till her nose is quite——well, its no business of mine

"Do you happen to know, Miss M'Cree, by-the-by,
If she really was married or not?
The reason, dear, why I ask you is, I
Heard it whispered one day by Miss Spot
That Mrs. P's marriage was only moonshine—
I should like so to know—though no business of mine."

"I really can't say for certain, my love,"
Said honest Betsy M'Cree.
"You know my love, that my spirit's above
All slander, and so dear to be Quite certain and sure, why I will ask Mrs. P
I should like to know much—though its nothing to me.

"In fact dear Miss Prim, I think it but right
I should start off at once for her place,
I think it but right I should see her this night,
And beg for the facts of the case.
Good-bye, love, good-bye, my dearest Miss P,
I must find out the truth—though its nothing to me."

MORAL.
To makers of mischief and gossipers all—
No matter what sex or degree—
Does the cap fit at all? ye will answer the call.
Miss, Mrs. or Mr. M'Cree!
The portrait is true, say each is it thine?
I ask you because its a business of mine.

Choice Literature.

No Remarkable Qualities.
Most boys who "get into the newspapers" are very remarkable boys.
Jim had nothing about his looks or actions, or color that attracted the particular attention of anybody.
When he first breathed the vital air he was simply a boy-baby, with two hands, two feet, two eyes, two ears, one mouth and one nose; He did not laugh and crow and sit upright as young geniuses do in their young babyhood; but he slept and waked, and ate (baby food, of course) and cried like any common baby.
When he grew older there were no uncommon developments except that he was fat, healthy and heavy.
Nobody congratulated his mother on raising a future President, nor applauded the bright genius that sparkled in the baby's eyes. The gossipers looked wonderingly at each other as the tender mother watched over her baby-boy, provided for his comforts and pleasures. He trundled his hoop and pressed him to her warm bosom.

He grew to boyhood but he was only a common boy. He learned his A B C with difficulty, and was slow in learning to read. His teacher thought he would never get through the multiplication table. But he never forgot it.
When the boys went a fishing, Joe went too—but he was too slow in getting his hook and line ready. The other boys were on and in and around the lake before his hook was fairly in the water. "To slow to move," the boys would say. "He'll sit there expecting the fish to come to him." It was even so—he remained stationary and fixed—but when night came, somehow, his basket was always full, while many of the bright, talking geniuses went home with the sad intelligence that the "fish wouldn't bite."
Joe's home was full of life and noise and bustle of intelligent older children and bright younger ones. Joe found himself, and everybody else found him solitary and alone, taking very little notice of the stir around him.
When he grew to be a man, the bustling drive-aheads laughed at his plodding, but by some means he seldom made a mistake, and though he did not seem to accomplish as much in a week as many another did in a day, yet at the end of a year there was always something tangible in his results, while the work of those who seemed to utterly outstrip him at first, ended in demolished air castles.
He has passed the meredian of life. Men eminent in the profession respect his judgement. Business men, coming upon the stage of action, long to learn the secret of his success. The bank leans upon him to carry it through the trying crisis, merchants and manufacturers lean upon him to save them from bankruptcy. Steady, constant, and hard study made him a scholar; persevering industry, accompanied with economy, raised him to opulence; close conversation and deliberate reflection cultivated a second judgement, and honesty and integrity secured for him the confidence of all who knew him.

Don't Kill Time.
"Spare a copper, sir: I'm starving," said a poor half-clad man to a gentleman who was hastening homeward through the streets in one of our great cities one bitter cold night. "Spare a copper, sir, and God will bless you."
Struck with the fellow's manner and appearance, the gentleman replied;
"You look as if you had seen better days. If you tell me candidly what has been your greatest failing through life I'll give you enough money to pay your lodgings."
"I'm afraid I can hardly do that," the beggar answered, with a mournful smile.
"Try, man, try," added the gentleman. "Here's a quarter to sharpen your memory; only speak the truth."
The man pressed the coin tightly in his hand, and after thinking for nearly a minute said; "To be honest with you then, I believe my greatest fault has been in learning to kill time. When I was a youngster I had kind parents, who let me do pretty much as I liked; so I became idle and careless, and never once thought of the change that was in store for me. In the hope that I should one day make my mark in the world, I was sent to college; but there I wasted my time in idle dreaming and expensive amusements. If I had been a poor boy with necessity staring me in the face, I think I should have done better. But somehow I fell into the notion that life was to be one continued holiday. I gradually became fond of wine and company. In a few years my parents both died, and you can guess the rest. I soon wasted what little they left me; and now it is too late to combat my old habits. Yes, sir, idleness ruined me."
"I believe your story," replied the gentlemen; and when I get home, I will tell it to my boys as a warning. I am sorry for you, indeed I am. But it is never to late to reform. Come to my office to-morrow, and let merry to inspire you with fresh courage." And giving the man another piece of money, and indicating where he could be found, he hurried away. Never "kill time," boys. He is your best friend. Use him well. Don't let him slip through your fingers when you are young, as the beggar did. The days of your boyhood are the most precious you will ever see. The habits you get into will stick to you like wax. If they are good ones life will be a pleasure, and above all a success—I mean a true success. You may not grow rich, but your life will be a real success, nevertheless.
If, on the contrary, you waste your early years, live for fun only, trifle with your opportunities, you will find after a while that your life is a failure—yes, even if you should be as rich as Croesus.
One of the saddest things is to meet a man who has let golden opportunities go by him just entering the battle of life, yet entirely unfitted for his position. He is to be pitied and yet blamed. In this favored land every man can learn to read and write a dozen lines without making mistakes.—Be assured, my young friends, it will be a source of shame to you all your days if you do not pay attention to education as boys.
The world is full of good books to read, You are surrounded with friends and relatives. Be warned in time, and coin happiness and honor in the future from the industry of the present, and you will not have read this in vain.

A Gleam of a Supposed Pistol.
The scene of this item is laid in San Francisco, on Washington street, near Leauenworth. The hour was late—past midnight.—A gentleman was wending his way homeward, thoughtfully circulating how much was left of the money he collected during the day. "Fifty cents for cigars; theater and extras, treats counted in, four dollars; new hat, ten dollars; fourteen dollars and fifty cents—yes, fifty cents for those extra car tickets. That just makes fifteen dollars. Eighty dollars collected—yes, here are two twenties and a five in this pocket—here's a roll of half dollars in the other—that's just right—sixty-five dollars I'll just give
——"
"Sixty-five dollars. Well, hand over the cash sir, and don't be long about it."
The capitalists was startled from his reverie by these words uttered in a sort of growling and determined manner by the midnight stranger. He saw that a pistol was [illegible]

Dolly Vardenism.

Here are a few samples culled from many that appear in the press—
Dolly Varden horse shoes are the latest.
The Chicago Post recommends oyster pans as Dolly Vardens for dogs.
The spotted fever is known as the Dolly Varden meningitis.
The Piegan Indians have the small pox in Dolly Varden patterns.
Dolly Varden hod handles have been thrust upon the agricultural market.
It has gone as far as Dolly Vardens chills in Georgia. The sufferer turns all sorts of colors.
Dolly Varden note paper, cards and envelopes astonish the country maidens.
"Come into your Varden Maud," is the way musical mothers induce their daughters to try on their new dresses.
Dolly Varden corsets reduce the figure without inconvenience or pain.
Dolly Varden hose with a clock running up the sides are the latest things out.
As the ladies gain courage, Dolly Vardens grow more numerous upon the streets, but no arrests have been made as yet, though the instigator of this hideous fashion is looked upon by competent detectives.
The Dolly Varden mania has extended to the gin shops, a certain city 'restaurateur' having suspended signs on which are engraved 'Dolly Varden smashes' and 'Horace Greeley cocktails.'
We have seen men present themselves at the bar of the police court with faces beautifully Dolly Vardenised by the masterly efforts of the 'cops,' and yet they live and move and have their—whiskey just as usual.
A St. Louis maiden explains that 'Dolly Varden was a character in Thackery's play of the Terrible Temptation. Thanks dear.

Greely and the Reporter.
There is a newspaper reporter out west who received his first lesson in journalism on the New York Tribune. He possessed good talent, but knew nothing about newspaper work, and was somewhat conceited. He was taken on trial by the city editor of the Tribune, his first work being to take a short report of a meeting of the Quarantine Board. His report was accepted, and sent up to the composing-room by an elevator. He considered this a great success, and felt elated The next morning he was sent to report the proceedings of a meeting at the Cooper Institute. He did not like the appearance of the men at the meeting, and, instead of reporting the proceedings as they occurred, he penned a burlesque of the business they transacted. Returning to the room of the city editor, he found that gentleman absent, and, taking it for granted that his report was all right, he marked it "Local" as he had seen done with his report the day previous, and sent it up by the elevator. The next morning he was called into Mr. Greeley's room. On his way thither he flattered himself that he was about to be complimented for his work, and probably promoted. On entering the room the old philosopher sauted him with: "Are you the d—— fool who sent in that report, yesterday, of the meting at Cooper's Institute?" The abashed reporter dragged out an affirmative answer. "Did the city editor examine your copy before it was sent to the composing room?" inquired Mr. Greely. "No," responded the reporter "he was not in his room when I came in, so I just chucked it into a little box where I had seen him put my report the day before, sent it up, and supposed it would be all right." "What business had you to burlesque those who were present at the meeting?" said Mr. Greeley. "Well, I considered them a set a wooden-heads, and I thought it wouldn't do any harm to say so," replied the reporter meekly. "H—l man," exclaimed the exasperated philosopher. "I am president of that organization. That's all, young man; you can go."

NICELY CAUGHT.
At a masked fireman's ball in New Orleans, a few days ago a gay and handsome man who had refused to take his wife to the ball on a plea of business, was much struck by a stranger a lady in a mask. On her he exerted all his fascinations.
"Oh sir, you quite put me out with your flattery! I suppose you are a married man," said the lady.
"No indeed, but I confess a willingness to get married since I have had the pleasure of seeing you;" was the gallant reply.
"Indeed, but you haven't seen my face yet."
"No, but I know it is beautiful. The exquisite grace which accompanies everything you do and say tells me as much."
"Do you really think so?"
"I think so, but you will no longer deny me that satisfaction, for I assure you lady, that I am deeply in love."
"Indeed."
"It is true. Until I met you to-night women have looked to me homely and commonplace."
"Oh, you are jesting."
"Indeed, I am not."
"And you never loved anyone before?"
"Never. Your sex appeared to me always deceitful, and my heart refused them all sympathy, but for you I feel a passionate attraction I have no inclination to resist."
"Can this be true?"
"It is, indeed."
"And you wish to see my face?"
"I am mad with impatience, since it is only your face my heart will ever mirror. It has upon it no rival impression."
"You are so persuasive I can no longer deny you the privilege—look," and the mask was removed.
"The devil!" said the dismembered Benedict, indulging in a prolonged whistle.
"Say, Mary, let's call it square, and go home."
"I think we'd better."
And they went.

Caught in his own Trap.
A girl, young, and pretty, and above all gifted with an air of admirable candor, lately presented herself before a Parisian lawyer.
"Monsieur, I have come to consult you on a grave affair. I want you to oblige a man I love to marry me in spite of himself. How shall I proceed?"
The gentleman of the bar had of course, a sufficiently elastic conscience. He reflected a moment, and then being sure that no one overheard him, replied hesitatingly:
"Mademoiselle, according to our law, you always possess the means of forcing a man to marry you. You must remain on three occasions alone with him, you can then go before a judge and swear that he is your lover."
"And will that suffice, Monsieur?"
"Yes, Mademoiselle, with one further condition."
"Well?"
"Then you will produce witnesses who will make oath to having seen you remain a good quarter of an hour with the individual said to have trifled with your affections."
"Very well, Monsieur, I will retain you as counsel in the management of this affair. Good day."
A few days afterwards the young lady returned. She was mysteriously received by the lawyer, who scarcely gave her time to seat herself, questioned her with the most lively curiosity.
"Capital, capital! persevere in your design, Mademoiselle, but the next time you come to consult me, give me the name of the young man you are going to make so happy in spite of himself."
A fortnight afterwards the young lady knocked at the door of the counsel's room. No sooner was she in than she flung herself into a chair saying, that the walk had made her breathless. Her counsel tried to reassure her, made her inhale salts, and even proposed to loosen her garments.
"It is useless, Monsieur," she said, "I am much better."
"Well, now tell me the name of the fortunate mortal."
"Well! then, the fortunat mortal, be it known to you, is yourself!" said the young beauty, bursting into a laugh. "I love you, I have been here three times tete-a-tete with you, and my four witnesses are below, ready and willing to accompany me to a magistrate," gravely continued the narrator.
The lawyer thus caught, had the good sense not to get angry. The most singular fact of all is, that he adores his young wife, who makes an excellent housekeeper.

The Corrupt Mr. Blake.
We do not look with a favorable eye upon a man who parades his virtues in public. He may be a very good an estimable gentleman, but we prefer to find out his virtues without his assistance. There are occasions, however, in which a man in self defence is compelled to refer to his private affairs. Mean and malicious slanders can only be reputed by statements, very often, which would never have been made public did not self-defence compel it. Mr. Blake's private character has not escaped assaults from his enemies. Unworthy motives and dishonorable conduct have been charged against him by those who knew the unjustness of their attacks. During the course of his speech to his constituents last week Mr. Blake took occasion to answer some of these charges against himself and his partners, and did so in a way which showed, instead of the reprehensible conduct charged against him, that it was just the reverse. All sorts of stories are concocted, as to his patrons. The contrary is the case, as will appear by the following, which we clip from the report of his speech.
"When he went into public life, he was an active member of his firm, he had a large and increasing share of profits, producing to him at that time over £3,100 a year. Now, his position was very different, for he had a fixed income from the firm of £1,200 a year only, while he would be receiving $6,000 if he had remained in private life. He could gain nothing from the increased profits of the firm, and those men who circulated them slanders knew the substance of what he had now said."
In other words by his [illegible] public business, Mr. Blake [illegible] been [illegible] of [illegible] a year, [illegible] yet [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Country Newspapers.
Few people appreciate the value of the village papers which gather up the news of a county and advocate the interests of a locality. And few understand the amount of ability required to edit such a paper where one man must be editor, publisher, printer, book-keeper, and all. Imagine how much the intelligence of the country would suffer by the blotting out of [illegible] papers, which treat the immediate interests of the people and thus come into immediate contact with their minds! The true country editor understands that his paper thrives by being intensely local; that it is not by learned editorials on tariff and income tax, but by articles of favor of the new railroad, by descriptions of the new factory, by advocacy of the new bridge, that he must succeed. People look in his columns not only for the latest general news, but for a mention of every interesting fact, of every curious matter of gossip in his own county. And thus the paper becom

To the Electors of the East Riding of Peterborough.

GENTLEMEN,

Having received the unanimous vote of a large and respectable convention to be the Standard bearer of the Reformers in this Riding, at the approaching election, and having also been most strongly and earnestly solicited to become a Candidate for your suffrages, as well as having the assurances of a cordial support from a large number of respectable and influential voters, I feel it a duty incumbent on me to accept the nomination, and I now appear before you as your candidate, respectfully soliciting your suffrages and support.

On my political principles I need make but little comment, they being so well known to the most of you. Suffice it to say that my feelings of loyalty and attachment to our illustrious Queen and British Institutions are so strong, that I would feel it to be my duty to preserve intact the present existing connection between this and the mother country.

The constitution under which we are now working and given to us by the Act of Confederation, I should also feel it to be my duty to guard inviolate

If elected I should also insist upon retrenchment in the public expenditure in every possible way consistent with the efficient working of the Government, and should oppose most strongly any expenditure without the consent of Parliament.

I would also support any wise measure that would have for its object the encouragement of immigration to this country.

I should also favor the passing of an election law for the election of members to the House of Commons similar to that which obtains for the election of members to the Local Legislature, and should also favor the passing of a law for the trial of controverted elections by the Judges.

I can say without the slightest hesitation that I have no confidence in the present men in power. The grossly corrupt acts of some of them, the disloyal utterances of others, and the extravagant acts of all, I would deem sufficient to induce me at the earliest opportunity to vote a want of confidence in them, but at the same time I would consider it to be my duty to assist, to the best of my ability, in the perfecting of any useful measure irrespective of the source from which it might emanate.

I hope to have the pleasure of seeing many of you in your respective localities ere long, when I will have a better opportunity of giving you a more extended enunciation of my views in regard to the political situation of the country, than I can do in an address of this sort.

In the mean time,

I have the honor to be,

Gentlemen,

Faithfully yours,

EVANS INGRAM.

MR. BERTRAM

Will address the Electors of the

WEST RIDING

AS FOLLOWS:

Monday Evening, 29th inst, in the MUSIC HALL, PETERBORO.

Wednesday Evening, 31st inst. LEHARNE HOTEL, ENNISMORE.

Friday Evening, 26th instant, at YOUNG'S POINT, SMITH.

To William Hall, Esq., and others.

GENTLEMEN,—Youre requisition asking me to become a candidate for Election to the Dominion Parliament is so largely signed by Electors from all parts of the Riding, that I feel it my duty to place myself at your service, by accepting the candidature. I thank you, gentlemen, for your confidence in my integrity, patriotism, and loyalty. Such ability as I have, if elected, I will exercise in the consideration of the legislation brought up in Parliament, voting for good measures irrespective of the party advancing them.

My love for the Country, which affords me so good a home, will compel me at all times to endeavor to protect the liberties of the people and the rights of all classes without distinction while it will be my aim to preserve unsullied the honor of the Country and the integrity of her soil and rights.

British connection I deem honorable, and necessary for our highest prosperity. In matters of trade I wish to see the utmost freedom prevail.

I condemn the granting of public lands en bloc to individuals or corporations, for any purpose whatever.

I wish to see the strictest parliamentary control over the public expenditure.

I desire to see a pure election law, and a measure to secure the independence of parliament.

The present Government, under the Hon. Sir John A. McDonald, does not possess my confidence, and whil I will support such good measures as may eminate from it, I will yet feel it my duty when called on, to vote in t, want of confidence.

While I believe that we should have a liberal railway policy to develope the resources of the country, I am of opinion that it should be our aim to prevent reckless expenditure and to insist on such economy and exercise of skill and judgement in location of railways as will secure the greatest benefit at the smallest cost, at all times keeping our expenses so low as to cause the burden of taxation to fall lightly on the people, thus inducing immigrants to our country and securing contentment and happiness amongst our people.

Trusting to have many opportunities in the canvass of more fully explaining my views.

I am, Gentlemen,
Your obedient Servant,
JOHN BERTRAM.

To the Electors of the West Riding of Peterboro'.

GENTLEMEN:

Having been requested by the friends of the Dominion Government to become their Candidate in your Riding in the approaching contest, I have agreed to become the standard-bearer of the party of Union and Progress.

The last few years have seen great changes in the position which we occupy, and from being a small colony of Great Britain, Canada is developing into almost nationality greatness. These changes have brought about a new condition of political parties, and since Confederation all prior issues have become dead, and should be forgotten, and worthy men who were formerly opposed to each other politically, have united to carry out to successful completion the great scheme of Confederation. This has developed a great party who acknowledge Sir John A. Macdonald as their Chief,—and to this party I belong.

I approve the policy which has been pursued by the present Government in the past, and will assist them if honored with election as your representative, in developing and carrying forward, successfully, their Railway and Canal Policy, which is so essential to the prosperity and greatness of our Dominion.

I think the action taken by the Parliament of Canada, with reference to the Treaty of Washington, was wise, patriotic and loyal to our British connection, and and as such must meet the warm approval of every one who at heart desires the cords, which bind us to Britain, strengthened.

I am of the opinion that all honorable endeavours should be made to secure such Tariff arrangements as will give our people a free market for their produce in the United States; and, failing to obtain this, a Tariff should be imposed by our Government to afford proper protection to Canadian producers.

I think all measures should be fairly considered upon their marits, without reference to the source from which they may come; and all measures that I believe to be introduced for the benefit of the Dominion shall have my support.

While claiming for my self freedom of judgement, and being ready to allow the same to those who are politically opposed to me, I shall always condemn and oppose any action that may be taken for merely partisan or factious purposes; and I highly disapprove of any political party advancing views and urging principles which they hope may assist them to power and then to be thrown aside as having served their purpose.

I feel that—from my long residence in Peterborough, and from the nature of my business transactions—I have acquired a knowledge that will enable me intelligently to consider measures which will tend to develop our resources and increase our trade and prosperity.

I shall take every opportunity of seeing as many of you as I possibly can during the campaign, and will be glad at all times if any of you desire further information as to views, to be asked as to such matters as may not have been touched upon in the narrow compass of a formal address.

I am, Gentlemen,
Your obedient Servant,
W. CLUXTON.

SURGICAL.—We have received a letter from Mr. James Davidson, 1st Concession of Smith in reference to an operation on a young horse for rupture of the abdomen performed by Mr. Dann, Veterinary Surgeon of this Town The colt was hurt when three weeks old—it is now over a year old—and the cure of the rupture, Mr. Davidson says, is complete. The letter is too long for insertion in the present crowded state of our columns.

MR. P. M. Grover and Mr. P. Pearce, Returning Officer, left together for the back country on Monday evening. If Mr. Grover were a Reform Candidate and Mr. Pearce a Reformer, what a howl of horror the party of John A. Macdonald would raise! It will be convenient for Mr. Grover to have the brotherly Council of Mr. Pearce in the Canvass. Yet we do not anticipate great success on their part as the electors are not likely to be deceived much by them. Neither of them have ever done any thing for the back country and have no claim on the people, besides the true interest of the people is to support Mr. Ingram, and leave Mr. Grover to follow Mr. Perry to Manitoba.

THOSE IRREGULARITIES.—The Postmaster of Hall's Bridge called on us during the week and assurred us that no irregularities have occurred there. He further assures us that very often he receives the Selwyn Mail instead of his own, and has to wait two or three days before this can be made right. Even on Saturday last the Hall's Bridge mail was in Selwyn he says. May we draw the attention of all assorting mails to this fact, so that it may not occur again. It is very annoying to those who go to the Post Office on Fridays and Saturdays and who do not return for a week, perhaps, to find that their papers and letters have not arrived, but have been sent perhaps to the wrong Post Office.

THE SCIENCE OF HEALTH.—We have received the second number [August] of this New Health Monthly. Good as the first number was, this is far better.—Among the contents we would note the first of a series of articles on Popular Physciology; Three Classes of American Girls; Electro-Therapeutics, by A. D. Rockwell M. D. The Privileges and Penalties of Sex; A pratical article on the Use and Care of the Teeth; Ante-Natal Influences; Way to use Wheat; Hygienic Bathing; Directions for Avoiding and the Cure of Summer Complaints; Sun-stroke; Sea-Sickness; The Bath and Small-Pox; an interesting Department of Agriculture and Talks with Correspondents. This New Magazine is published at the low and poplar price of $2.00 a year. Single numbers, 20 cents. S. R. Wells, Publisher, 389 Broadway, New York.

LACROSSE.—A very hotly contested match of this very interesting and exciting game took place on the Ashburnham Cricket Ground on Tuesday, between the Millbrook Junior Club, and the Young Canadians of Peterboro, resulting in favor of the Peterboro Young Canadians in three straight games. Time, 45 minutes, 20 minutes, and 1 hour and 55 minutes respectively. All the games were warmly contested, and the playing was good on both sides. The Young Canadians went in to win from the first, so that Millbrook should not have the honor of defeating Peterboro twice; and their opponents manfully endeavored to carry off the laurels. The Millbrook Club had the advantage in weight, but the Young Canadians in play. Names of the Millbrook Club:—James Duncan, Wm. McIver, J Grier, Geo. Derry, Wm. Scott, George Duncan, Walker Needler, John Stinson, James Cissold, Albert Armstrong, Alex. Allen, Malcolm McGee, Field Captain A. McBain, Umpires, Messrs. Sutton and Scott. The Reception of Mr. Johnson MPP, of Dalhousie.

On Monday a deputation from the County Lodge, consisting of Messrs. Weir, Hatton, Bissett, Stratton and [illegible] met Mr. Johnston at Port Hope to escort him to Peterboro. He was accompanied by Mr. Jas. Johnston of Kingston and Mr. D. Marshall of Port Hope. Col. Smart and others saw him safely on the cars but were prevented by business engagements going any farther.

When the train arrived, at the station and the ground around it was densely packed with those eager to catch a glimpse of the distinguished Irishman.

He was met by Geo. A. Cox, Esq., Mayor; James Hall, Esq., Sheriff; J. B. McWilliams, County Master; A. H. Anderson, Deputy County Master, and other County officers.

The Lodges from Norwood, Keene, Allandale, Lakefield, Springville and the Town, were drawn up to receive him

Three splendid carriages were also ready for the visitors, delegates and committee. The whole was then formed into a grand procession, which marched along Rubidge Hunter, Water and George streets, and conducted him to the Caisse House where Lunch was provided for the visitor, and officers of the County Lodge and Committee of management.

At about half-past two, the party proceeded to the Drill Shed which was densely packed, all desirous of seeing and hearing the Deputy Grand Master of Ireland.

Here Mr. McWilliams, County Master read and presented the following address from the Brethren of the County, to which Mr. Johnston replied extempore in an eloquent and appropriate speech.

THE ADDRESS.

To the Right Worshipful the Deputy Grand Master of the Loyal Orange Association of Ireland and Grand Master of the Royal Black Companions—William Johnston, Esq., M.P.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,

We the Orangemen of the County of Peterborough on behalf of ourselves and all the loyal subjects of our Most Gracious Queen desire to bid you welcome to Canada, and particularly to this County.

Your gentlemanly courtesy even to those who differ from you in opinion, together with the liberal policy you have advocated on behalf the tenant farmers and working men of Ireland, has given you a wide spread fame and popularity, and caused you to be esteemed by your friends and respected by your enemies.

Your heroism in defending our Glorious cause—the cause of civil and religious liberty, and the zeal which you have ever manifested in defending what is right and standing by your principles not even flinching when Popery and the influence of its emissaries had made it a crime for a man to do his duty—a crime punished with imprisonment—have made your name famous abroad as well as at home. Yes, they have made your name a household word in every Protestant home throughout the Dominion and every other part of the British Empire.

We trust your visit to this fair portion of Her Majesty's Dominions—one of the freest Countries in the World and the brightest gem in the Crown of our beloved Sovereign—may be beneficial to you as well as to those whom you visit, and that our recollections of your visit may stimulate us in the future to battle for the cause of civil and religious liberty.

We therefore pray that your life may be long spared to build up and strengthen the good work for which your love and talent have done so much—that the past may be but the index to the future and that your precept and example may encourage many more to go and do likewise. And when the Great Grand Master of the Universe sees fit in a good old age to gather you Home to your fathers in peace may your mantle fall on another equally endowed with your spirit and patriotism.

Signed on behalf of the Protestants and Orangemen of the County of Peterboro.

J. B. McWILLIAMS,
County Master.

In the evening a Dinner was given in his honor in the Music Hall, to which about 150 gentlemen sat down. The Hall was neatly decorated, and appropriate mottos, such as "No Surrender," "Canada our Home," "A United Empire," "Our Guests," &c., were all round the Hall.

Geo. A. Cox, Esq., Mayor, occupied the Chair. On his right were the Gues of the evening, Mr. Johnston, and Bros. Hatton, McWilliams, Stratton and Stevenson of Omemee; on the left Bros Jas. Johnston of Kingston, Marshall of Port Hope and Weir.

The Dinner was got up in Mr. Turver's best style, and was all that could be desired.

Ample justice having been done to the viands, the Chairman proceeded with the usual loyal Toasts, viz., The Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales and all the Royal Family, the Governor and Lieut. Governors of the Dominion.

The Army and Navy and Canadian Volunteers, was given by Mr. McWilliams and responded to by Col. Poole.

Mr. Hatton gave "The Glorious, Pious and Immortal Memory of William III Prince of Orange," which was received in silence.

The chairman then proposed the health of our distinguished and highly respected Guest, Bro. Johnston, which was received rapturously.

Mr. Johnston responded, returning thanks for the hearty manner in which his name had been received and also for the magnificent display in the Drill Shed. His name following the names of the great and the good in the Old Land and also the great and the good in this New Land, was almost a double honor. He felt satisfied from the way in which the Queen and Royal Family were toasted, that in no part of the British Empire were there more loyal subjects than in this Dominion, not merely lip loyalty or expressions but from the heart. The people of Canada knew and valued the freedom they enjoyed, not the freedom of a few, but of all citizen, and every people. He felt too that the Canadian people and the Canadian Volunteers were ready to shed the last drop of their life's blood to retain the liberty vouchsafed to them by the empire. No doubt Canadians desired and loved peace and would seek to maintain it with the American people. But even Americans must be taught that peace can be purchased at too dear a rate. He then referred to the deeds of William of immortal memory, and to the strength that supported him the Lord of Hosts and how he remarked that Ireland was worth fighting for, so he, (Mr. Johnston), as he passed through our country, called on our magnificent lakes and rivers, our our rising towns, industurious population, and the freedom and liberty of all, thought Canada was worth fighting for. Many there were no prospect hanging round, all could secure an abundance; there were no manufactories robbing a hardworking. Every man had the opportunity and the independence to work for his country. Canada was a great country, and he was glad to see as if he were at Chautauqua, as all were for law abiding and loyal. They would [illegible]

Election Intelligence.

Mr. Bertram addressed the electors of North Monaghan at the Town Hall on Friday evening. Mr. Robson occupied the Chair. There was a very good audience evidently largely in his favor One or two present tried to make a noise and disturb the meeting but the good sense of the people prevented them.

After Mr. Bertram, Mr. Carnegie appeared for Mr. Clnxton, and spoke an hour and a half abusing the grits and Messrs. Mackenzie and Blake.

Mr. Fairbairn, however, in a telling speech destroyed the Ex-M P P's gossamer tissue of falsehoods and proved conclusively that the Blake-Mackenzie Government acted in the most honorable and straight forward manner and that Mr. McKellar never sought to use Government influence in the "Proton affair," merely saying that they would carry out the liberal policy advocated while in opposition.

On Monday evening Mr. Cluxton addressed the electors of the same place, aided by Mr. J. F. Dennistoun. Messrs. Kidd and Dumble appeared for Mr. Bertram.

Both the meetings were strongly in favor of Mr. Bertram. We regret to learn that one or two of Mr. Cluxton's supporters endeavored to desturb the meeting, while Mr. Bertram's friends were speaking. This will not help the John A. party.

EAST RIDING.

Mr. Ingram is pursuing his canvass vigorously and is everywhere well received. He is promised the support of the best men in the Riding. Reformers are fully alive to the issue of present contest and are about to demonstrate their disapproval of the John A. Macdonald party by electing Mr. Ingram.

Reformers of these Ridings would do well to remember that Sir John A. Macd

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR—The following resolution was passed unanimously at a meeting of the Pic-nic Committee held to-night in the Orange Hall here. You will confer a favor by publishing it in your next issue.

Moved by Bro. J. B. McWilliams, seconded by Bro. M. Hall, and resolved—That whereas, by the report given in the Times of the Orange Excursion on the 12th of July last, on board the Col. Strickland, ar. attempt is made to cast blame on Captain Beamish for his management of the Boat, we, as a Committee regret that such a report was made, as we feel certain that Captain Beamish used his best efforts to have the Excursion successful, but the number of excursionists was beyond the capacity of the Boat, and the state of the Lake with Saw Logs was beyond his power to control. Therefore the Committee exonerate Captain Beamish from all blame.

F. J JAMESON,
Sec. Pic-nic Committee.

Shall We Elect Him.

MR. EDITOR,—

Mr. Cluxton now offering himself as M. P. was a member of the Town Council for some time, and some of the electors still remember how he sold them to the Midland R. R., and some people say he was well paid for the little job; but he denies this and says he got nothing for the transaction, and is now very sorry for what he did, and will not again betray his trust if elected as M. P. (unless he is better paid). It will be a long time before some of the sufferers forget his roguery, and they will be careful not to put him in a position where the temptation to betray might be too strong for his principles. But if he is really sincere in his repentance, and sorry for his past dishonesty, he has still an opportunity of proving his sincerity by putting himself in the place of the sufferers, paying off the claims they have against the R. R. and receiving from the R. R. what he thought the claimants should be satisfied with, and what by his act they were forced to receive as compensate for the injury done them.

AN ELECTOR.

Lindsay, 22nd, 1872.

Government Meeting at Rutherford's School House.

Having arrived at the School House about dusk, I was surprised to see that the audience were locked out. None of the Government Party appeared to take interest enough in the meeting to have things arranged, although Mr. Cluxton, Mr. Scott and Mr. Carnegie were on the spot no one appeared to make a move as to getting the key till one of the Reformers sent his team to get it. But alas! when the door was opened there was no light and no one of the party offered to procure light till Mr. Carnegie sent his conveyance accompanyed by Mr. Rutherford, a Reformer, to procure lights at his (Mr. Rutherford's) house. When the lights did arrive, which was nearly 9 o'clock, the meeting was organized by Mr. Cluxton appointing Mr. J. Barnard, Jun'r, to take the chair.

Mr. Cluxton then addressed the meeting. He dwelt particularly on two points: The kindly feeling which he and Mr. Bertram felt towards each other, and the experience he had as a produce merchant, giving him an idea of the way in which the Bonding System and other things connected with the Washington Treaty was a benefit to this country. After hard work to strain out half an hour.

Mr. Bertram was called on, and showed his position as a Candidate, and what he felt to be some of the things to which our attention ought to be directed.

Mr. Fairbairn, M. P. P. then followed, and fully explained the "speak now" and Proton slanders showing that there was no truth in either one or the other. He sat down amidst loud cheers.

Mr. Scott then occupied the time in a very plausible manner, vainly attempting to fasten guilt on the Government of Ontario and holding up the John A Governmeot as being all that was right and proper; but his words had little weight, and would do very little for the Government Candidate.

He was followed for about five minutes by Mr. Carnegie, after which the meeting adjourned, the audience being tired of listening to such clap trap as was brought up in favor of John A's rule. They made a "poor show."

AN ELECTOR.

South Monaghan, July 22nd, 1872

Sir F. Hincks in South Brant.

Sir Francis has been compelled to seek some more reliable place than Lanark, and has cast his lot in Brant. He addressed the people of Burford on the 15th, where he was met by Mr. E. B. Wood and Mr. Patterson, the opposing candidate. Mr. Wood's speech had a telling effect on the electors present. Below we give Mr. Wood's speech, and advise a careful perusal of it.

Mr. E. B. Wood came forward and was received with loud cheers. He then proceeded to review the course of the Government on the principal political questions of the day. Prior to Confederation, he said, there were two causes of grievance in the Province of Ontario which brought about Confederation—representation by population, and the expenditure of the public money. In 1864, when the Coalition was formed, it was composed of the leaders of both parties, and at that time the old questions of responsible government, clergy reserves, the extension of the franchise, and religious equality having been settled, and responsible government having been acceded to by all parties, there was no real difference of opinion between them as to these questions of representation by population and the handling of finances. In 1867, there was therefore a cessation of hostilities and they were to have a new state of things, carrying out representation by population, and taking care that the finances should not be used to obtain support for the Government of the day and conciliate constituences that they might send members to Parliament to continue that support. From 1841 to 1867 Ontario had paid away not less than forty millions of dollars in matters in which she was not interested, and which were not common to both provinces of the Union. It was to get rid of this state of things that the people of Ontario went heartily into Confederation and he went to the House of Commons to commence a new state of things and most anxious to support the Government of which Sir Francis Hincks was a member. He tried his best to do so, but the first thing that staggered him was this: We had to build an intercolonial railway, by the terms of Confederation. He found that Sir John Macdonald, Mr. Campbell, Mr. Macdougall, Mr. Tilley and others, a majority of the thirteen Ministers, were of the determined opinion that it was in the interests of the country to build that road from the River du Loup to the railway system of New Brunswick, a distance of 189 miles instead of by the shorter route from Lawrence and the Bay Chaleurs a distance of 106 miles: the Government finding it impossible from engineering difficulties to build the shorter road, five of expense to the Government for all time to come on being paid a subsidy of eight millions, whereas the Bay Chaleurs road, it was known, would cost twenty millions—he said twenty five, the equipment would fort it up to thirty millions, and to run it through the country where it is situated would cost the tax payers one million dollars a year. (Hear, hear, and cries of "chance.") As a proof, he referred to the cost of running the present Nova Scotia railways, and the Grand Trunk railway. Ontario would have to pay five-ninths of the amount required, whatever it was. Sir G. Cartier insisted that unless the rest of the Government concurred with him in favor of the Bay Chaleurs route, he would resign and break up the wigwam, and Sir John A. Macdonald had not the moral courage to stand out. (Applause.) The consequence was that in order to save his position and his Cabinet he was obliged to yield, and to succumb to Lower Canada, which in fact had ruled this confederation since 1867. (Applause.) They were now constructing a road by private enterprise from Rivere du Loup to Woodstock which, would effectually cut off all chance for the Bay Chaleurs road. He had voted—which he would never do again—to entrust the Government with the fixing of the route, for some millitary reasons Sir J. A. Macdonald, Mr. Macdougal and others preferred to retain their office than to save the people of Ontario $11,100,000. He was most anxious to support the Government in the interests of Ontario. But when the Nova Scotia scheme came down, when the country was told that there had been an error, a mistake in the arrangements, he examined the figures and found that the public debt which Nova Scotia had thrown upon the union was $27.77 per head of its population, while that for Ontario was only $26 per head; that its subsidy was 80 cents a head, with the right of increasing from the present population of 340,000 up to 400,000 —another advantages;—that the special payment to 340,000 people was $60,000, while Ontario with more than a million and a half of souls had only $80,000, instead of $223,000 which it should have had, at the same rate. He tested all these matters and challenged the Ministers to show why Nova Scotia should have any alteration of the arrangement, and they were utterly unable unable to do it, for the resolutions on Confederation said that the arrangements were finally fixed and unalterable except by the Imperial Parliament the Imperial Act said the same, and Mr. Galt and Mr. Brown declared the same thing from the Ministerial Benches. After all this evidence was unanswered by the Government, he could not support them. (He said hear, and applause.) He had generally approved of Sir F. Hinks' financial policy, though he thought a limit ought to have placed on the amount of notes issued on the gold reserve. He criticised the National Policy, declared that no man knew better than Sir Francis that it was all a farce, and expressed his regret that any one with that gentleman's history should allow himself now to be made a tool of in imposing upon the people, tickling the ears of his friends, and deluding those who wanted a duty on their grain by holding out a hope that they would get one, in view of the elections. They would never hear of it afterwards. The day for that is past and gone. The time to do it was when the Americans put on their tariff, and Sir Francis knew that he could not impose duties on flour and wheat now, because Nova Scotia and New Brunswick would not let him do it. (Hear, hear, and laughter.) The next instance in which he could not support the Government was in Reference to British Columbia. He had been very anxious for the admission of British Columbia, but he wanted it on some what reasonable terms It was proposed that a railway should be built to the Pacific Ocean in ten years. That was a great boon for British Columbia; but though this was Canada, and although we were prosperous, we could not pretend to build railways and colonize the whole world. And here was British Columbia, 3,000 miles off, that we must annex, and to which we must build a railway. What was to be done? What did the liberality of our Government grant? They contracted to build the road in 10 years, and agreed that all the lands the rail way required should be given them, 50,000,000 acres being appropriated for construction, and 50,000,000 acres more for the sinking fund to pay the $30,000,000 subsidy which the company was to have. All the land in Ontario through which the railway would pass—about 900 miles—they were give for nothing, and he considered they ought to do so. As far as the Dominion lands were concerned or to British Columbia, the Government were to do the same, which he thought right. But for the lands in British Columbia, that Province was to be paid $100,000 a year for ever,—equal to two millions of money for the barren rocks and mountains over which the railway was to run. If they were going to give them two millions, why not do it honestly, and not use the pretext of paying for the rocks and mountains? Then British Columbia had a population of only 10,586, and yet they put in the constitution of the enormous lie that the population was 60, 000. They gave them a subsidy of 80 cents a head for 60,000, and allowed them to come in with debt of a million and a half on the ground that they were 60,000. They were also to establish a line of steamers to run fortnightly between San Francisco and Westminster, and $56,000 was put in the estimates for that. They gave them six representatives and three senators for 10,500 people, so that 15 people in South Brant had but the same influence as one man up there. The way in which the representatives of that Province who on an average represented about 1,700 people, would act in voting away the money of the other Provinces, was shown when a question arose about the payment of $45000 for five years for a geological survey. Mr. Thompson, the member for Cariboo, who represented he believed something like 1,015 persons, said he was surprised at their haggling over such a small sum as $225,000, for they could spend that in British Columbia in one year in that way; and yet the whole of the revenue of that province for the last year was only $250,000! And Mr. DeCosmos, who was a precious tyro in money matters, said he would always vote with the Government. Well might Sir John say he would have six supporters from British Columbia, for last year between six services of that province. The Pacific and $700,000 were voted for the Railway scheme was one that would tax the energies of all the manied people of this country for the next twenty years. They would have to bring into requisition all their borrowing powers in all the countries of the world. As the London Times had said, it was a wonderful undertaking, fit to be compared with the Mont Cenis Tunnel or the Sues Canal. The American Pacific Railway was nothing like it. That was only 1,700 miles long and it cost $202,000,000. He contrasted the state of the country through which that Railway passed with that where the Canadian Pacific was to be built Mr. Tuch had stated that it would cost $60,000 a mile in British Columbia, or 36 million dollars in that country alone. The Grand Trunk cost $106,000 a mile, including equipment; the Great Western 16,000 a mile and the Northern about as much. The average cost of these great railways was $90,000 a mile. If this road were built at the same rate as the American Pacific it would cost three hundred millions, and nearly the same at the rate of our large railways; and yet they justified a Government which would go blindfold into this scheme, would take a leap in the dark and mortage their children's property for all time to come. (Loud applause) He contended that the Government was wrong in not having the elections on the same day and in opposing the trial of controverted elections by the Judges. They had introduced a franchise bill of the most absurd character, making the franchise uniform all over the Dominion, but had abandoned it, and now there was an Act which was only to be a temporary measure. He pointed out that the Government in taking power to dispose of the money and land grants to the Pacific Railway had put it beyond the power of Parliament and the people to touch it at all. (Voice They are responsible). If they were responsible, how would that be better than shutting the stable door after the steed was stolen! (Hear, hear) Then there was Manitoba, which they first proposed to rule by a Governor in Council, and then then sent up Mr. Howe and they knew how he had acted there and Mr. Macdougall, who had to come back again. And when Scott was murdered they took no action, but joked over his grave. Did the responsibility of trying his murderers rest in Ottawa, or in England, or in Manitoba? Did they refer any case to the courts? Did they consult the Queen's Counsel of whom they themselves were one? Did they demand the surrender from the United States? When that fiend went down disguised, Sir John Macdonald said he would not remove the Lieut. Governor, but his masters in the Cabinet made him remove them as delegates and shake hands with them. He warned the people of Ontario that unless they rose in their might and their strength they would find their position worse than ever it was before Confederation. (Loud applause.)

To the Public in General, and Farmers in particular.

PUMPS. MACHINES.

Henry Owens

Begs leave to bring to your notice once more his truly celebrated SWING and FORCE PUMPS, which have already received five Provincial First Prizes, and have hitherto met with unparalleled success. There can be no reasonable doubt, now after a year's trial of the superiority of this pump over all others. H. O. has purchased the sole right under for patents, for the counties of Peterborough and Victoria, and will keep a large stock on hand if possible, which he will sell at very cheap rate. He has increased his facilities for making all kinds of pumps, having lately added to his machinery a new and first-class pump boring machine. Every thing in the pump line can be furnished on the shortest notice, and Repairs carefully and promptly attended to. Parties ordering Pumps please state depth of well and all other necessary particulars.

HENRY OWENS

is again in the field with REAPERS and MOWERS, and would respectfully call the attention of Farmers to the fact that all the Reapers and Mowers he has sold during the past three years have given undeniable satisfaction. He will have on hand this year WOODS SELF-RAKE REAPER AND MOWER, CAYUGA CHIEF MOWER, AND JOHNSTON'S SELF-RAKE REAPER, and any other machine of this description that may be required can be furnished by him on very short notice. Parties intending to purchase Reapers or Mowers this coming season will find it to their advantage to give their orders before the 1st day of May, as up to that date he is permitted to sell at last years prices; after the 1st of May, on account of the rise in iron, prices of Machines will be raised about 10 per cent. Sample Machine to be seen at my shop.

Common Pumps as Cheap as Others.

HENRY OWENS gladly avails himself of this opportunity to offer his most sincere thanks to those friends who have so kindly and liberally extended their patronage to him during the past few years, and he hopes by honest and energetic attention to such orders as he may be honored with in the future, to secure a continuance of the favor he so highly prizes.

THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL

Worth Ten Times it's Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgement of the people of any length of time. One of these is THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six of some of the best. Oils that are known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power yet producing effects which could never result from those of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change takes place forming a compound which would not by any possibility result from any other combination or proportions of the same ingredients, and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results, and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered. Wherever applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparations nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the small of Oils which they may contain.

Fashion on the Brain.

It seems to me that women now
Dress up so awful queer,
In narrow skirts and little hoops—
How funny they appear,
Their hair they frizz in fancy shapes,
I've laughed and laughed again,
To see how queer the women look
With chignon on the brain.

Last night I met a little man
Rigged up in wonderous style,
She had a little bonnet on
That really made me smile,
'Twas smaller than a cabbage leaf
Dried up for want of rain;
How very queer the women look
With bonnets on the brain.

They say they wear their dresses short
To show their pretty feet
But if their shoes are No. 7's
Extreme will never meet;
And when they wear their dresses long
And draggle in a train,
I always think of bean poles with
Gored dresses on the brain.

Oh, well, this is a curious world,
Pels teeth, false calves, and ob
They speak of palpitators, but
The truth I do not know,
But let them wear what e'er they will
Remonstrance is in vain,
And they are really charming with
The fashion on the brain.

Josh Billings on Laffing.

Anatomikally konsidered, laffing is the konvulsion of feeling good all over, and showing it principally in one spot.

Morally konsidered, it is the next best thing to the ten commandments.

Philosophikally konsidered, it beats Herrik's pills, 3 pills in the game.

Theorikally konsidered, it kan cost enny at the the largest in existence.

Analitikally konsidered, enny part of it is equal tew the whole.

Konsistentially konsidered, it is virtho and something tew drink.

Mutherfullyly konsidered, it is just as different from enny other feelin xize as it is from itself.

Fanmatically konsidered, it has a good deal of essence and some boddy.

Pyrotekhnikally konsidered, it is the fireworks of the soul.

Syllogestically konsidered, the koncloshens allwus follows the premises.

Spontaneously konsidered, it is as natural and refreshing as a spring bi the road-side.

Phonetorematikly konsidered, it lights up like a globe lantern.

Kumbustibely konsidered, it has all the dissolving properties of a hot whiskee punch.

But this is too big talk for me; these fitaleuse wuz put into the dikshionary for those ghuss in knowledge tew use who hav tew hand a human kleen up to the mantell with powder and ball when they go out tew hunt pisenuxe.

But I don't intend this essa for laffing in the lump, but for laffing on the half shell.

Laffing is just as natural tew cum tew the surface as a rat is tew cum out or his hole when he wants tew.

Yu kant hevp it back by swallowing enny more than yu kan the hookspus.

If a man can't laff thare is enny mistake made in putting him together, and it he won't laff he wasts as much keeping away from as a bear trap when it is set.

I hav seen people who laffed altogether too much for their own good or enny-body else's; they laff like a harrell of sider with the tap pulled out, a perfekt stream.

This is a great waste of natral juice.

I hav seen other people who didn't laff enuff tew giv themselves vent; they was like a barrel ov nu sider too, that was bunged up tite, and tew start a hoop and leak all away on the sly.

There ain't neither of these 2 ways right, and they never ought tew be pattented.

Sum pholks hav got what is kalled a bass laff, about half-way bet ween a growl and a bellow, just as a bass dus when he feels his oats, and don't exzactly know what ails him.

These pholks don't enjoy a laff any more than the man dus his victles who swallows his partakens whole.

A laff tew be nourishome wants to be well chewed.

There is another kind or a laff which I never did enjoy, one loud burst, and then everything is as still as a lager beer barrel after it has thowed up and slung 2 or 3 gallons or beer around loose.

There is another laff which i hav anallised; it kame out or the mouth with a noize like a pig makes when he is in a tite spot, one sharp squeal and two snikkers, and then dies in a simper.

This kind of laffing is learnt at femeal boarding-skools, and dont mean enything; it is nothing more than the skin of laff.

Genuine laffing is the vent of the soul, the nosrils or the heart, and is just as necessary for health and happiness asspring water is for trout.

There is one kind or a laff that i always did reckommend; it looks out or the eye fust with a merry twinkle, then it kreeps down on the hands and knese and plays around the mouth like a pretty moth around the blaze or a candle, then it steales over into the dimples or the cheeks and rides around in those like whirlpools for a while, then it lites up the whole face like the mellow bloom on adamask rose, then it swims oph on the air with a peal as happy as a dinner bell, then it goes kuk again on gold-tiptops like an angel out for an airing, and laze down on its little bed ov violets in the heart where it cum from.

There is another laff that no boddy kan withstand; it it is just as honest and noisy as a distrikt skool let out tew play, it dubbles and twists him like a whissee pbut it lits him up oph from his cheer like feathers, and lets him back agin like lead it goes all through him like a pocketpeice, and finally leaves him as weak and as krazy as tho he had bin soaking in a Reading bath and forgot tew be took.

This kind ov laff belongs tew jolly good phellowe who are as hellth sa quakers, and who are as easy to please as a gall who is going tew be married to-morrow.

In konclusion i say laff every good chance yu kan git, but don't laff unless yu feel like it, for there ain't nothing in this world more hearty than a good, honest laff, nor nothing more hollow than a heartless one.

When yu do laff open yure mouth wide enuff for the noize tew git out without squealing, then yure head back as tho yu wen going tew be shaved, hold on tew yure false hair with both hands and then laff till yure soul gits thoroly rested.

But i shall tell yu more about these things at some fewter time.

DR. HOWE OF THE USE OF FELLOWS' HYPOPHOSPHITES.

PITTSFIELD, Me., March, 1872.

MR. JAS. I. FELLOWS—Dear: Sir During I have given your Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites a fair though somewhat severe trial in my practice, and am able to speak with confidence of its effects. In restoring persons suffering from emaciation and the debility following Diptheria, it has done wonders. I constantly recommend its use in all affections of the throat and lungs. In several cases considered hopeless it has given relief, and the patients are fast recovering; among these are Consumptive and old Bronchial subjects, whose diseases have resisted the other modes of treatment. For impaired indigestion, and in fact for debility from any cause, I know of nothing equal to it. Its direct effect is strengthening the nervous system renders it suitable for the majority of the diseases.

I am, sir, yours truly,
WM. S. HOWE, M. D.

That iron is valuable as a medicine has long been known, but it is only since its preparation in the particular form of Peruvian Syrup that its full power over diseases has been brought to light. Its effect in cases of dyspepsia and debility is most salutary.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills.

For all the purposes of a Family Medicine.

Perhaps no one medicine is so universally needed as a cathartic, but very few have found one that they could use with any degree of confidence. By its power to cure, and its safety, this pill is unrivalled by any in the list of cathartics. Every one knows when he needs a dose of physic, and all know that what it does once it does always—since it never fails through any fault or neglect of its compositon. We have thousands upon thousands of certificates of their remarkable cures of the following complaints, but such cures are known in every neighborhood, and we need not publish them. As a direct in all ages and conditions in all climates; containing neither calomel or any deleterious drug, they may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar coating preserves them ever fresh and makes them pleasant to take, while being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

They operate by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action—remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, restoring their irregular action to health, and correcting, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first origin of disease.

Minute directions are given in the wrapper on the best, for the following complaints, which these Pills speedily cure:—

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Listlessness, Loss of Appetite, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach and restore the healthy tone and action.

For Liver Complaint and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Bilious Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Bilious Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for each case, to correct the diseased action or remove the obstructions which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back and Loins, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With such change those complaints disappear.

For Dropsy and Dropsical Swellings they should be taken in large and frequent doses to produce the effect of a drastic purge.

For Suppression a large dose should be taken as it produces the desired effect by sympathy.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

As occasional dose stimulates the stomach and bowels into healthy action, restores the appetite, and invigorates the system. Hence it is often advantageous where no serious derangement exists. One who feels tolerably well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

Probably never before in the whole history of medicine has anything worse or deservedly acquired the confidence of mankind, as that extraordinary remedy for pulmonary complaints. Through a series of years, and among most of the nations of the earth, its virtues have been proclaimed by men it has risen higher and higher in their estimation, as it has become better known. Its genuine character and power to cure the various affections of the lungs and throat, have made it a terror to the insidious disease, against which it is the infallible protector. While adapted to milder forms of disease and to young children, it is to the more severe and confirmed cases, and to the most desperate, that can be given for incipient consumption, and the distressing affections of the throat and lungs. As a preventive against sudden attacks of croup, it should be kept on hand in every family, and indeed as all are sometimes subject to colds and coughs, all should be provided with the antidote for them.

Although seated Consumptions is thought incurable, still great numbers of cases where death has seemed settled, have been completely cured, and the patient restored to sound health by the Cherry Pectoral. So complete is its mastery over the disorders of the Lungs and Throat, that the most obstinate of them yield to it. When nothing else could reach them, under the Cherry Pectoral they subside and disappear.

Singers and Public Speakers find great protection from it.

Asthma is always relieved and often wholly cured by it.

Bronchitis is generally cured by taking the Cherry Pectoral in small and frequent doses.

So generally are its virtues known that we need not publish certificates of them here, or do more than assure the public that its qualities are maintained.

Ayer's Ague Cure.

For Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons.

As its name implies, it does Cure, and does not fail. Containing neither Arsenic, Quinine, Bismuth Zinc, nor any other mineral or poisonous substance whatever, it is novice, leaves any patient. The number and importance of its cures in the several towns, and villages in the broad country, and no where without a parallel in the history of other medicines, are proofs which the afflicted and the public will be glad to know. The undersigned are ready, and hereby pledge themselves, to furnish the evidence of the radical cures effected by its use in their respective localities, wherever other remedies had wholly failed. The unanimity of the testimony, in regard to its wonderful power over the various forms of disease originating in miasmatic or malarious localities, will be presented by taking the AGUE CURE daily.

For Liver Complaints, arising from torpidity of the Liver, it is an excellent remedy, stimulating the Liver into healthy activity.

For Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints, it is an excellent remedy, producing many truly remarkable cures, where other medicines had failed.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. AYER & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass., and sold by all by Druggists.

IRON IN THE BLOOD

MAKES THE WEAK STRONG.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an ailment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low state of the system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form, its energising effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building up an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.
